

Dear FCC & Chairman Tom Wheeler,

My name is Luke Dubber and I live in Kenai, AK.

Living in such a remote place as Alaska and being in the information technology field this is very important to me.

We already do not have much for competition here and a pay for better connection just for one website is unfair and adds even more cost to a already expensive place to live.

I urge you to schedule a series of large, open public hearings around the country to hear the concerns of the people about your net neutrality plan.

I urge you to protect an open internet by building a solid legal argument for net neutrality using Title II of the Telecommunications act which would declare the internet an essential service as a public utility.

The internet has become such a vital part of most people's live here in the United States that I don't see any other way around it; it's just like water, power and gas.

Also net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

True net neutrality is important to me because it can help us reduce suffering by facilitating the expansion of conscious awareness.

Sincerely,

Luke Dubber
