

To Chairman Tom Wheeler:

I very much think that it is the FCC's obligation to protect an open equitable internet by building a legal argument for net neutrality using Title II of the Telecommunications act. My hope is to see the internet declared an essential service as a public utility, and thus be as insulated from any intrinsic changes made to the way service is accessed by users and providers. I believe that allowing different priority to content providers who have the capital to pay for said preferential treatment will be a detriment to the system as a whole and devastate the ideology which permeates the free and open internet that we have today.

Thank you,

Sean Sayers
