

7521701474.txt

Net neutrality must be preserved as an absolute, for this is an extremely slippery high-angled slope. The risks far far outweigh the benefits. At best, the proposed changes would provide huge benefits to a few extremely powerful corporations and almost no advantage to the population at large. At worst (and highly likely) they will evolve into a system that kills innovation and stifles competition while working almost entirely against the interests of consumers.