

I support the rights of ALL legal, American Citizens to use the Internet to communicate, or receive communication, read and use information from websites on the Internet to advance their ability to be successful and happy in their lives.

We should be allowed to do this freely and without discrimination from government agencies, or corporations, who seek to limit our ability to exercise our god-given rights as stated in our U.S. Constitution.

We The People have two bad choices to choose from here: 1) Edited content, higher prices, etc. or 2) Burdensome regulations that limit our Constitutional rights.

I support the free-market design without government interference and manipulation of this design.

The FCC wants regulation for fairness and free speech, etc. under net neutrality of ISPs by seeking common carrier regulations. That sounds well and good, yet, by doing this act The FCC, like most government agencies, will actually limit our ability to exercise our constitutional rights through the promotion of only some of those rights through regulation; thus, rendering any right not stated in the rules as meaningless. This is a very worrisome trend in our government today. The black and white clarification of rules today may not apply to tomorrow; therefore, limiting our ability to succeed tomorrow. I don't see the foresight of this agency in their rule making that will help our country and the legal citizens of this country. Remember, regulations erode our other rights from being exercised ever again unless more regulations are created - which is a waste of taxpaying dollars.

Therefore, if corporations want to limit or edit internet information, as they stated they should have the right to do i.e. Verizon vs. FCC, then the people should form their own corporation to compete with them and put them out of business. We do not need more regulation for fairness, etc. while growing our dependence on government to solve our problems (the FCC's position in this case). That is what America was about and will be about if the legal citizens of the USA start thinking about ALL of their god-given rights granted in our U.S. Constitution.

Thank you,
Michael Di Legge - legal, citizen of the USA