Re: Protecting and Promoting the Open Internet, GN Docket No. 14-28

Dear Ms. Dortch:

On July 16, 2014, Yahoo! Inc. (“Yahoo”) had the following meetings:

- Tekedra Mawakana, Yahoo’s Global Head of Public Policy, Margaret Nagle, Yahoo’s Head of US Government Affairs, Pantelis Michalopoulos, Steptoe & Johnson LLP, and the undersigned counsel met with Gigi Sohn, the Chairman’s Special Counsel for External Affairs, Daniel Alvarez, Legal Advisor to the Chairman, Matthew DelNero, Deputy Bureau Chief, Wireline Competition Bureau, and Eric Feigenbaum, Office of Media Relations.

- Tekedra Mawakana, Yahoo’s Global Head of Public Policy, Margaret Nagle, Yahoo’s Head of US Government Affairs, and the undersigned counsel met with Commissioner Jessica Rosenworcel and Priscilla Argeris, Legal Advisor to the Commissioner.

At those meetings, Yahoo discussed the importance of a free and open Internet, particularly as users migrate to mobile platforms—accessing online content on smartphones or tablets. Edge providers such as Yahoo need regulatory certainty. Yahoo also discussed the extent to which Section 706 of the Telecommunications Act of 1996, 47 U.S.C. § 1302, can be a source for a ban against pay-to-play arrangements. Yahoo discussed the option of Title II of the Communications Act as a last resort if rules under Section 706 proved not viable or inadequate to protect Internet users.

Sincerely

/s/
Andrew W. Guhr
Counsel to Yahoo! Inc.
