I am concerned about this merger. Some companies have already removed rural television stations, such as RFD-TV, from their programming. Those of us in rural areas often purchase satellite so we may watch these stations. They contain good, wholesome entertainment and allow us to keep up-to-date on markets nationwide. I realize the number of rural homes using satellite/cable is a "drop in the hat" compared to the number of urban households, but these stations are an important part of our lives. They also provide urban dwellers with a window into contemporary rural life. This household will cancel its satellite service if these stations are no longer available.
