I've been a comcast customer for over 27 years. Not many other choices for me because I NEED fast UPLOAD speeds for work. I tried Dish, it was horrible, went back to comcast. My Bill is over $325 a month, for cable, 4 phone lines and Internet. Although I wish there were more competition so prices could be kept in check, comparing apples to apples, I also believe that that web hosting companies, video and music streaming companies should ALSO pay their fair share to access the networks. Take the controversy of Comcast vs. Netflix, why should comcast have to pay for the infrastructure and mainting the equipment and comcast customers have to pay for tier speeds and the Netflix and hosting companys don't? Why should my speeds suffer because someone down the street wants to stream videos all day and night. If the customer has to pay for faster access and increased downloading, then the "netflix's" of the world should also need to pay for the speeds and traffic they will be using.
