

7521745131.txt

The FCC should definitely strike down bans on municipal broadband. These bans were purchased by broadband monopolies, and do not serve the interest of the citizens. The amount of money these broadband providers are pumping into lobbying means citizens have little hope of overturning these laws legislatively. Operating as essentially monopolies, these broadband service providers need to be regulated, and allowing for free and open competition is something definitely worth protecting.