

7521747591.txt

As I believe most people who have posted a comment to the FCC recently have not received any sort of response from this commission, I am curious to why a group of federally appointed employees would even remotely consider ending net neutrality. You were hired by the people to understand the needs of the masses, and yet, you will allow large internet service providers to control and manipulate you into practically handing them a monopoly over the entire internet? Lobbyists control the FCC apparently because I have not heard of a single civilian who wants this. Net neutrality is an important aspect for the future of Americans, so why is this even being considered?
I expect a response.

Samuel Brynestad
Student
St. John's University
Computer Science Major
Entrepreneur