Sir(s):

I am embarrassed to see that Net Neutrality is even being discussed in the 'Land of the free'. This discussion speaks volumes about our 'system' and the flaws within.

Is it not clear that one of the reasons the USA still stands as a leader in this great world is because of innovation? Is it not clear that this innovation comes from start-ups in garages and dorm rooms like those of Steve Jobs, Michael Dell, and Mark Zuckerberg? Is it not clear that much of this innovation would have been crushed by the status quo if the status quo would have been able to yield a weapon like charging different rates to different clients?

In summary: If the USA likes being a leader then Net Neutrality must be granted to one and all. The Open Internet is one of the crucial ingredients to further innovation, and world leadership for the USA - period. Tell Comcast, and other service providers, to quit their whining and enjoy the significant profits that Internet innovation ALREADY provides their shareholders. Stop this nonsense and let's move on!
