

It doesn't seem that long ago when AT&T was broken up because it was becoming too large and competition was suffering. Now here we are again. If things keep going at their current rate there won't be but a handful of companies at the very top. I feel that the merging of AT&T and DirecTV is a huge mistake. I have an iPhone with AT&T service on it and I also have DirecTV as my way of receiving television service as I live far from any large city. I am perfectly happy having the two separate companies. One deals with phones and the other television channels. Seems like that is how it should be. My fear is that if the two companies merge, service, overall, will decline. I don't believe the comments that the rates will decrease, as there is very little history of rates decreasing to any extent after mergers. Please do not allow this merger to take place.

Harrie Westphal