This is ridiculous. ISPs should not be able to set speed limits based on where the information comes from. The internet should be a free and open space with limited barriers to entry. The internet should be a place where disruptors can easily enter the market and challenge the established status quo!

Without an open internet, ISPs will be free to control the flow of information. What if your precious political party is on the wrong side of an ISP giant like TWC and suddenly your campaign site is slower than fly in molasses?! You won't think too highly of your decision to allow them to throttle speeds if that happens!!!

Also, I pay my ISP for general access to the internet, not for subsets of the internet. If TWC decides they want to fight Netflix because they won't cough up an extra "service" charge, I have little to no opportunity to switch to a different ISP. You have allowed the creation of a monopoly giant that should be brought down!
