As a person interested in business (drone technology in particular) and the innovative opportunities for improving our agricultural production with people in mind, I am writing to impress upon you the importance for seeing the viewpoint of the rural citizen and/or farmer at the same time I am living in an urban environment. I also travel to Texas and Nevada to attend national cow-horse events, and as I view the RFDTV channel in particular, I gain a commonality to discuss and share with the other event attendees.

So as you can see, even though I live in an urban environment, I need to know what the farming community thinks, and I need to have a historical (long-term) collection of their ideas in order to make sound investment decisions, and also to have a better quality of life as I attend events put on by the rural/farming community.

I am hoping that you will recognize the need for the two to co-exist; agricultural lifestyles, and urban lifestyles. Our country's culture depends on these views working together. Thank you!!
