Residential VoIP

Residential VoIP (Voice over Internet Protocol), also referred to as VoIP Phone, Digital Phone, Internet Phone or Amplex Phone service, is a way of making phone calls using your Amplex Internet service. VoIP is inexpensive, can be used to replace your existing home phone service and there are no unexplained taxes, service charges or additional monthly fees, plus you get lots of great standard features.

Simply pick up your regular home phone, dial a number and talk just like you would with a traditional home phone service. It does not matter if the person you are calling has a VoIP phone service or a traditional phone service and the only additional piece of equipment that you need is an adapter supplied by Amplex Internet when you sign up.

VoIP Considerations for Home Users

Here is what you need to know about VoIP to decide if it's right for you:

The quality of VoIP has vastly improved over the years. Sound quality has improved to where many people have abandoned traditional phone systems in favor of VoIP.

Today's VoIP service allows you to make and receive calls using standard analog phones. No special dialing or complicated phones.

Utilizing VoIP for home phone service can significantly reduce your telephone costs. With VoIP, you no longer have to have separate providers for phone and Internet—another significant money saver.

- ▶ VoIP service makes your phone highly flexible. VoIP systems make it easy to setup conferencing and voicemail forwarding. As long as you have access to a broadband Internet connection, you can use your VoIP system anywhere.

Usage Graphs, Plan caps or limits

Usage Graphs We recently added usage graphs to the customer invoices. We have added the graphs for a couple of reasons: We want our customers to know how much data they are actually using. We want you to be able to tell when your usage has changed significantly. It makes it easier to compare services with other technologies such as WiFi hotspots. New service plans may have data limits.
