

Frontier Communications Challenge to MicroLogic, Inc. d/b/a 3W Logic

Frontier challenges 3W Logic's census blocks because 3W Logic does not offer a stand-alone voice services; a high-speed broadband connection is a pre-requisite for service.

Voice Service:

3W Logic's website, a screen shot of which is pasted below, indicates that VoIP services are available but "all you need is a cable, DSL, or high-speed wireless connection to the Internet." This is reinforced by the offering page where a residential phone offering is $24.99 but as the service details page points out, that is based on having an existing broadband line. 3W Logic offers a phone/wireless internet bundle, but there is no option to purchase voice services as anything other than a broadband application. The FCC's Report and Order (DA 13-1113) notes that "all broadband connections offer the capability to receive an 'over the top' voice over Internet protocol service from a third party" and therefore requires "the provider itself to provide voice service, in addition to broadband, in order to be designated an unsubsidized competitor." ¶ 9. Based upon the information below, 3W Logic does not provide its own voice service.

Accordingly, 3W Logic should not be considered an unsubsidized competitor for the purposes of CAF Phase 2.
