

7521769989.txt

yes this is a 2nd post from me, and if anybody is actually reading all of these, im not posting 100 copy paste messages. i truly feel that allowing corperations to dictate what internet areas are alloud to be seen at a reasonable level of speed is a blow to democracy, i know it sounds drastic but here's how it is.

campaigns are funded, the vast majority of this funding comes from corperations/welthy individuals who own these corperations. so what thier interests are get passed and things they are agianst dont, its not hard to understand and certianly not hard to watch happen. and to be honest this stopping in the next 10 years or so is laughable, the democracy decided by the people can return if the actual people can participate on an equal playing field as the corperate backed cantidates, but the only place that this is even close to possible to happen is the internet. it is the ONLY place where sombody, with ideals backed by the people, but not backed by the corperations can become widly known, because wi thought corperate backing they cant purchace radio or tv ads and those get expensive very fast. as a medium where (yes adds cost money) but at least non-advertisement publicity can be free, it really is the last hope for non-money based political action to take place, (and yes protests exist, but most of the news companys (by the name company, have a profit agenda) and will cover it an a way that helps their endorsers), yes it sounds paranoid, no im not wearing a tin-foil hat. its simple buisness practices, were i in their shoues i would take the same steps to secure my dominance. but i guess im writeing this in the bleak hope that whatever poor souls they probably hired to sourt thorough all of these (and probably not read half of them) actually transferrs the correct message of how this effects the indurstry yes, but im not afraid of that, the internet/cable buisness cant get much worse even if run by rockerfeller in the late 1800s its just divided up by reigon instead of all over all at once. im really concerned by the political impact it could have on the futre. yes those who can afford ads and air time will always have more voice, and its been well established that that will remain a fact, BUT AT LEAST ALLOW ONE PLACE ON EARTH WHERE A MAN OR WOMAN CAN BE JUDGED BY THE MERIT OF HIS OR HER CHARACTOR AND NOT BY THE AMMOUNT OF MONEY IN HIS OR HER POCKET