Back at the turn of the century, when industry made a huge upsurge in America, the Steel, coal, and textile industries, among others, formed large monopolies. It was an unprecedented boom, but led to major abuses of power. There was a tiny percentage of the scandalously wealthy, and with their money, they bought major political corruption, and the amoral and unbridled oppression of their workers to the point where hundreds died as a result of poor working conditions and institutionalized poverty. Such is the way with \"300 pound gorillas\", absolute power typically corrupts absolutely. It was an illustration of the plutocratic class system that evolves in the presence of polarized and centralized wealth and power in the hands of only a few if it not restrained by laws that favor the rights of citizens over the self-serving greed of the deep-pocketed. Thanks to the recent ill-advised and self-interested relaxations in laws that were developed long ago to prevent these same gross social injustices, abuses, and corruption promulgated by corporate abusers over a century ago, there are those in our government who are abetting a return a time when the freedoms of Americans were usurped by the extremely wealthy. The intention of Comcast and Time Warner is to form what will be in every sense of practice, a monopoly. They have also proposed what, if coupled with the end of Net Neutrality, is the return of what is tantamount a class based system on the Internet. What they are proposing that the very wealthy will have the fastest Internet and preferential treatment, and the small business owner, the student, the private citizen who can't afford whatever price, whatever service, or lack thereof, whatever fees, limitations, access, whatever format that this monopoly will dictate to them, will lose their parity in free and open interchange that the Internet previously afforded the average citizen. To allow this merger to happen without restriction is to kill the right to freedom of speech in this country. History proves this over and over, monopolies without limitation abuse the rights given us by our Constitution. I urge the legislators of our country to prevent this corporate takeover of our government at all costs before we require a second revolution to get our democracy back on track. Reject corporate monopolies and the Comcast/Time Warner Cable Merger now!
