

7521793953.txt

Comcast acquiring Time Warner Cable is a terrible idea. They are the two worst rated cable/internet providers available for customer service. How is combining them supposed to help? There is already practically zero choice when it comes to choosing cable/internet. You're stuck with whatever provider happens to be in your area. Merging these two mega corporations will just make it even harder for the smaller companies to compete. Rates for cable and internet keep going up and up without service improving and there's not a thing consumers can do about it. Comcast has already been down this road before when it merged with NBC and it hasn't fulfilled it's many promises. What on earth makes you think that they will do what they say in this case?!?

Meanwhile, Comcast is ginning up support for their merger plan from every angle. They're using campaign donations, lobbyists, dinners and parties, and even philanthropy and outreach to lower-income families as ways of trying to convince the FCC and the DoJ that expanding their business is in the public interest.

And yet, over half the country still thinks that this merger is a pretty terrible idea for consumers.

JUST SAY NO!!!!!!!!!!!!!!