

7521795153.txt

Here in the U.S., we already suffer some of the poorest service and highest costs for internet service among industrialized nations. As jaded as I have become of big business and politicians, I am writing this in support of net neutrality in the hope that maybe this time the consumer won't be sold out by the organization that is supposed to be looking out for our interests. I support a title II approach - we need more regulation. Some of the big providers are already proceeding as if they have the right to violate net neutrality. They need to stop and you need to stop them.