I have had the misfortune to deal with Time Warner, Comcast, ATT and various predecessor company names for over the last 20 years. Cable providers, in general, have and continue to exhibit monopolistic behavior. That is, when you are only game in town, or one of only a few, you don't need to care about customer service. You consider yourselves exempt from having to invest in a basic infrastructure that would be expected in a normal competitive environment i.e. being able to talk to a real person without being told the current wait time is 15 minutes !!! The proposed Comcast Time Warner merger is just plain bad for consumers. It will make cable providers even more monopolistic - higher prices, poorer service. There is so much historical empirical data that shows the mergers of this magnitude, in almost any industry, are NEVER good for the consumer - this merger is no exception. Let your good judgment prevail and block this merger. Thanks in advance for your consideration of my comments
