It is just so obvious to those of us who have dealt with Comcast in our homes for service, and there are millions of us apparently: what Americans need is NOT some merger that will actually increase the size of the Comcast monopoly; what we need is actual competition in our geography among equivalent service providers. In my neighborhood of Nashville, it appears that we are going to get that, thanks to Google fiber; and just as soon as Google fiber is available i plan to switch my current Comcast internet to Google Fiber. Even if Google Fiber charges more. Not because Google fiber is going to be faster, although it will be. I will switch because interfacing with Comcast for any service means encountering horrendous service and employee behaviors. I 'cut cable' a little over a year ago for TV services, which in my case at the time was a satellite service, because I'd already fired Comcast. I cut cable TV entirely due to the outrageous cost for all subscription TV; but there is currently only one choice for fast internet where I live: Comcast. To add insult to injury, a TN federal legislator in my next door district, Marsha Blackburn, is attempting to restrict communities in TN from providing their own internet service to citizens, as does Chattanooga. She is a Republican. I was a lifelong Republican until a few years ago, when i could no longer agree with so much of what current-era Republicans are advocating. It has become very difficult these days to identify any federal organization that is both competent and trustworthy in leadership. I sure hope you and the FCC will prove yourselves to be competent, trustworthy, and WISE. I oppose the merger of Comcast and Time Warner. Susan O'Connor, MD Nashville, TN
