

7521804438.txt

We must keep the playing field for internet access level. Allowing companies to charge on both ends will only increase costs for the average consumer - and possibly limit access to poor or low income families. Large ISPs have effectively become localized monopolies, and they should be treated as such. That means putting them under the so-called "Title II" approach - same as phone companies.