I would like to see ISPs become regulated the way my phone company is, under Title II.

But damn if I don't think the entire telecom and internet regulatory scene doesn't need a bootkick to get out of the early 20th century. I still cannot believe the number of taxes I pay for a land line! Most of them are outdated.

I'm all for true net neutrality and do not believe in favoring one industry over another or ANY industry over consumers, even if the industry thinks it's a person! The usefulness of the internet must not become something only wealthy people can access or afford. It will only add to the gap between the rich and everyone else. Think it through. If schools have to pay more for internet education resources such as educational films, but their states and districts don't pony up, education suffers. This country is already behind in education compared to many countries. This hurts us competitively. Do not let the Comcasts and Netflix and AT
