Allowing ISP to enact a two tier system would be a mistake. The ISP providers in the United States already provide sub par service as it is their speeds are worst amongst the developed world yet we already pay more. And allowing them to enact this system will not only damage the consumer but damage the economy as well by forcing other internet companies to pay to ensure their websites are not throttled. Which will force these companies to raise prices, or cut jobs. I know ISP lobby billions of dollars to make sure you do what they want and there is no point to telling you because you will just allow them to get away with extortion. But please consider my comments on the matter. Also I know even if this somehow read you will probably not even read this. Thanks for reinforcing my doubts about the fairness of the American system of government.
