Please maintain net neutrality. ISPs are quite obviously equivalent to common carriers, and should be required to treat all users the same, just as the telephone companies must. I fear a world where the wealthy control access to information, which is what would happen when money would buy internet access, and block access for those less fortunate. Small companies need equal access to grow into large companies who will employ Americans! What small startup relegated to the slow lane might become tomorrow's Google or Facebook if they had equal access to the internet?
