The internet should be an open place to share and express ideas with others. We do not need big corporations making mandates to the consumers for no reason, except for them to make more money. We have seen countless successful companies get started on the internet that have created numerous jobs, if the internet companies get to decide when, where, and how quickly you can go to a site there less likelihood that a new company could succeed. Think about the mass of people and not about the big money that is being thrown around in order to allow giant companies like Comcast and Time Warner to bend regulations to their every whim. We want to allow people to find and interact with communities that make them feel like they belong, don't make getting to these places harder or more expensive for people who really need them.
