Dear FCC,

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as a health care worker and with family who are small business owners, I need to know that there will not be barriers to entry on any number of websites I use to do my job or for the new ideas and services that my family hopes to bring to the marketplace. If ISP subscribers have an easier time loading websites of existing companies than new innovative websites and products, it can only mean less innovation and information for all of us.

Sincerely,

Cynthia Yashinski
