The internet is a fundamental part of the infrastructure of a 21st century economy. Allowing rent-seeking monopolies to control access even further than they already do can only result in a further degradation of the U.S. economy, a crippling of small businesses, and a reduction in quality of life for all Americans. Not only is it essential that the current net neutrality rules be retained, the FCC should act to break up the monopolies and conspiracies in restraint of trade that now characterize the American broadband landscape, and to ensure the existence of high-speed fiber capacity sufficient to bring America up to modern standards.

As a personal note to chairman Tom Wheeler, you are a festering pustule on the backside of humanity. You should immediately resign and remove yourself permanently from any position in government or any position relating to the internet in any capacity. Ideally, you should then move to Antarctica and not pollute society further with your presence among us.
