To the Tom Wheeler, and the rest of the FCC officials, I urge you all to uphold net neutrality. By giving cable companies such as Comcast and Verizon the ability to provide faster internet speed to websites willing to pay their highest bidding would be fraudulent to the American people. The internet remains the last bastion of non prohibited free speech that allows any and all Americans to freely voice their opinions, and by giving Comcast and Verizon power to control the internet speed will inevitably give these companies the power to silence the voices of the small, of the minority, and this, going back to the founding principles of this nation, would be the most Un-American activity to happen to the American public at the hand of corporate greed. Corporations, as history tells us too often, are worried only about the bottom line, which they achieve at almost any cost. So, I urge you again to take these comments into consideration and fight for the interests of the American public that deserves free and open internet, especially considering that the middle class funds corporate greed on all levels. Cut the small voiced people a break.
