Keep the net neutral. Selling our country's commonly owned land and airspace cheap, or outright giving it away, is absurd, especially in a land which claims to depend on competition to cause the best to rise to the top. Commonly owned resources are doled out to big, strong, rich hands while elected officials abuse their power and act against the public good; they complain that there is not enough budget money to feed hungry children and provide even preventative medical care. Solution: Charge the rich for access to air space, fill the coffers, do not charge the poor for access to what they already own, then complain that they are burdensome. Corporate 'people' are the burden that weighs down the economy and wastes human potential by wasting the possibility for basic survival. Keep the net neutral. Protect the freedom of access to information. By abridging freedom to communicate, the elected oppress instead of protecting "We, The People." The ignorance of King George was the result of disinformation and denial of information by his "advisors." Think. Learn from your own history. Be ethical.
