Re: GN Docket No. 14-28, Protecting and Promoting the Open Internet
GN Docket No. 10-127, Framework for Broadband Internet Service

Dear Ms. Dortch,

Enclosed please find the signatures and comments of thousands of Free Press activists urging the Federal Communications Commission to protect real Net Neutrality.

Since the FCC's proposed rules were announced we have seen a groundswell of public opposition to that proposal. We call on the FCC to abandon any unworkable rules based on compromised legal theories, and instead reclassify ISPs as common carriers.

The whole concept of the internet is computers being connected and sending information to and from one another. How is this not a communications service? Losing net neutrality will just allow corporations like Time Warner to deepen their pockets even more than they already.
—Michael Brandt, Broomfield, CO

I don't want Comcast controlling all these speeds, and costing these independent providers and programmers a fortune. Comcast is the worst.
—Owen Goebel, Grand Rapids, MI

Do the right thing for the people!
—Kristy Ranta, Grand Rapids, MI

As heard on the howard stern show
—Joseph Mooski, Brooklyn, NY

Americans need net neutrality!
—Matthew Larkin, Weymouth, MA

Enough.....is definitely enough....

Thank you!
—Tim Hunt, Washington, DC

Fuck the FCC!!!!!!
—Rudy Phillips, Dyer, IN

Net neutrality- a major issue that needs to be addressed head-on. Corporate interests do not supercede the public good.
—Chris Russell, Milton, MA

Please. This is crucial. Inequality is gaining ground, and the economy is headed back to the 1930's. If you do nothing, millions will suffer from your inaction. Real people, with real ideas and real dreams. Your choice -- don't let big corporations shut down the American dream.
—Carolyn Buckley, East Stroudsburg, PA

Don't let Time Warner and Comcast destroy the internet. No one supports this except for the cable companies, gee I wonder why.
—Jackson Gurrentz, Boulder, CO

This is absurd. We already pay for cable, internet, data, etc. We shouldn't have to pay for websites or faster Web speed more than we already do. Restore net neutrality!!!
—Christine L Tavernier, Roseville, MI

Set rules that give consumers a voice in the net neutrality future rules. Each company that supports the internet infrastructure should be able to make profits, but the fairness in allowing all internet companies equal access should be the federal government's responsibility. Among countries that are leading the world in speed of internet and access of same US is most expensive with the lowest access by geography. We should be the world leader in both.
—Vernon Gooden, Jonesboro, GA

You've destroyed the last great part of the US. You should be ashamed of yourself.
—Tyler Weber, Minneapolis, MN

Assert your authority and reclassify broadband (including mobile broadband) providers as Common Carriers under Title II.
—Tobias McShane, Santa Clara, CA

Restore net neutrality
—Paul Chazotte, Jupiter, FL

In most municipalities throughout the US we have pretty terrible internet options. Monopolies like Comcast and Time Warner have wielded their lobbying power and precluded the competition from even materializing, often times by preemptively suing the municipalities they serve to prevent them from laying the kind of infrastructure that would result in much faster internet. Now, the same business interests are colluding and trying to make things even worse by circumventing the free and open principles upon which the internet has always operated. This cannot be allowed to happen. Preserve net neutrality. Reclassify the internet as a common carrier. The telecoms that we've entrusted with bolstering our internet's infrastructure and taking us into the future have failed. Meanwhile other countries surge ahead. I know this first hand because I used to live in Korea where I paid significantly less and got much better and faster service six years than I do today in my own country. Do the right thing. Don't let the lobbies win again.
—Ryan Beal, Los Angeles, CA

In STEM research fields, net neutrality is crucial in order to access papers and results from all journals no matter how small. Quick access to the internet from any website prevents information from being lost to the rest of the scientific community.
—Dan Borgnia, Cambridge, MA

Quit the nonsense already!!!
—Mike Groban, New York, NY

I want the FCC to reclassify Internet Service Providers as "Title Two Common Carriers".

Please protect the interests of the citizens of this country over that of a very few companies that would act like near monopolies.
—Paul Durocher, Scarborough, ME

Voicing my opposition to proposed internet fast lane. I thought the FCC was designed to protect consumers, not be a shill for multi-billion dollar corporations. Net Neutrality rules should be restored and the internet should be treated as a public utility (which it is).
—James Narviez, Hopkinsville, KY

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY
—, Gilbert, AZ

Global communication and open access to information is the most valuable resource to promote freedom and democracy. We allow its wholesale commercialisation at our peril.
—Clive Menzies, ,

The Internet is an integral part of not only the global telecommunications infrastructure, but also of the social/political/cultural life. Net neutrality is therefore an imperative for enabling an equitable internet. The best way to ensure that kind of access is for ISP's to be treated as "common carriers" of information. I strongly urge the FCC to reclassify broadband as a "telecomminications service".
—Dan D., pasadena, CA

INTERNET: Municipal Broadband established like Chattanooga Tennessee No DATA discrimination - nondiscrimination..one class is not to be favored over another network. The internet is built for everyone and everyone can have access to it freely. NO Tiered internet NO Bandwidth Throttling Rules apply to all wireless carriers and broadband.

—Dylan Friend, Benton, AR

Net Neutrality is what makes this world go round the gov. makes more than enough money you dont need another senseless way to get more. peoples lives are here.
—Tyler boling, Stafford, VA

Taking away net neutrality is really messed up and it will hurt the economy and every day people more than it would help.
—Kelly, Raleigh, NC

The internet is free speech you have no control over it so stop already —Mary Smith, San Antonio, TX

—Jacob Fuket, ,

—Makayla Holzheimer-steir, Havre, MT

The ISP preventing us from looking at specific web sites is a violation of our rights, more specifically the freedom of expression. It limits our expression by keeping us from going to websites. It has the possibility to force us from finding information we want to see, instead finding something entirely unrelated. It could limit our acquisition of information that should be readily available to us.
—Michael Wieland, Blanchard, OK

Please restore net neutrality
—Ramiro Ixta Bravo, Santa Ana, CA

Internet is in a phase of perfection, but of course the screwy government ruins everything. We work for food, homes, and luxury, BUT APPARANTLY THAT ISN'T ENOUGH .
—Miller G, Orlando, FL

This is unacceptable. There will be no mercy on Verizon. Protests and boycotts shall happen. I guarantee it.
—Seann Wilson Jr., Wenatchee, WA

Apparently, democracy means doing whatever you can to make the rich even richer, even if it means ignoring the pleas of the people. I am a young developer, just starting out in the business, and I fear that this ruling will do nothing but make it more expensive (if not impossible) for me and my colleges to bring new ideas and businesses into the world. Netflix may have the money to stand up to version's bullying, but how is somebody who is just starting out supposed to pay them off? Not that you care.
—Andrew H Taylor, Dothan, AL

Keep the internet free to everyone!
—William, Violet, LA

We need the virtual market place to be free to access by ALL businesses, to ensure healthy competition in America. As a business student, The FCC is reshaping the world I will be operating in as a oligarchy. Please reconsider, this opinion.
—David Melville, San Francisco, CA

This is one of the big issues,and few Americans have a position on the other side. I've never understood the reluctance to label all telecommunications as telecommunications. Please don't let that reluctance negatively interfere with the lives of millions of Americans.
—Stuart Jay Bernholc, Raleigh, NC

Save net neutrality now!!
—Marc ussini, ,

Broadband is not a finite resource, it is a communications service!
—David Rodriguez, Chicago, IL

I wish to start an internet business and I believe that the absence of net neutrality would place an undue burden and lead to financial hardship that would make it nigh impossible to get off the ground and start contributing to the economy as a whole. The only way to ensure that both our pursuit of happiness is minimally hindered and our first amendment rights are firmly protected on the public forum of the internet is the restore Net Neutrality with firm guidelines and initiate superior legal standing. Also, if that doesn't work, Microsoft and a myriad of other non ISP's are probably willing to bribe you, so get on that.
—Koen Phoenix, Indianapolis, IN

I, like most users of the internet oppose companies like Verizon taking advantage of users and ruining potential for other companies to grow. Verizon, and others, will block all other websites that cannot already afford ridiculous fees to be used by the free public. This is the definition of a monopoly and it needs to be checked, not later but now. I'm begging that who ever reads this will try to help make a difference.
—Thomas Kelly, Seattle, WA

FCC TAKE BACK THE POWER by order of the GODS #restorenetneutralityrules
—Zeus Olympios, Lawndale, CA

I'm sure these actions will affect us in Canada also. Equal internet for all !!
—Bernard Boonstra, ,

Restore net neutrality, and break the stranglehold ISP regional monopolies and oligopolies have over content providers that compete with them in providing media for the end user. The ISPs have become too big and powerful and abuse their abilities by forcing anti-competitive practices. The internet wasn't broken till the Big ISPs decided to break it.
—Carlos P., Pittsburgh, PA

Free speech is free speech, no matter what the platform.
—Natalie Kennedy, Wellsboro, PA

Please keep Net Neutrality, it is crucial to the Internet and to the future of our generation and future generations alike. Without it we will be dominated by the ISP's and they will have near-complete control over the Internet, THIS CANNOT BE ALLOWED. Please restore/keep Net Neutrality and put an end to this!
—Alex Mikaelson, Lexington, NC

Did you know money does not grow on trees, that's why most of us are still POOR. Please reverse the ruling, I am in college and I have work to do online as well.
—Lauren Nash, Florissant, MO

The internet is a way of life for a lot of people now. This will effect everyone, from students to gamers to little shops and more. This is insane, and it needs to go away.
—Amber Maroshek, Petaluma, CA

This can be very harmful to more people then you think. A lot of people these days use the internet to market their business Or have online businesses. This would also be incredibly costly to school districts who rely on technology for not just teaching but for homework purposes as well. the school I attended uses websites for Most Projects and academies in my school district for online activities in those interactive Career courses where online course work is required. People should be able to use the internet freely but with certain expectations
—Maya Nichols, Justin, TX

More money hungry corporations trying to suck every last dollar out of middle class America.
—Bridgette, Seneca Falls, NY

This is important.
—Benjamin Richardson, Arlington Heights, IL

Yeah I'm not doing that —Lexi Stone, McCloud, CA

This is disgusting
—Errin, Fort Belvoir, VA

The internet is not meant to be regulated. It is meant to be free and open.
—Steven Susana-Castillo, Middletown, CT

If you don't reinstate net neutrality, you will be utterly gutting the first amendment. If we don't have an open, neutral internet, the internet is not worth using.
—Thomas Carswell, New York, NY

Fuck this!
—Brooke, Findlay, OH

It's unacceptable to place large corperations at an advantage over new companies hoping to break into an emerging market.
—Michelle Polton-Simon, New York, NY

Monopoly sized ISPs must be held accountable for the responsibility they have to allow total access to the internet, and these new anti-neutrality movements only benefit the pockets of the shareholders and the ISPs. To charge different rates of speed or to completely block certain aspects of the internet is discrimination and basically a moral crime in nature. Please help keep the virtual world a free place, unregulated by the flow of cash for those who already victimize the rest of us.
—John Tillman, Minneapolis, MN

Stop being asshats and use some commonsense. Net neutrality is a must and should not be turned into another life-sucking business venture. You guys are way beyond greedy by now and we the People are 10,000$ done with your shit. The government has turned into nothing but puppets in the hands of the 1%. They've turned everything into a commodity, even undeniable human rights!
—Melanie Henderson, Elsmore, KS

wtf guys, really?
—Alexandra Hovey, Ranson, WV

You bastards!
—Dennis Zweverink, ,

This is awful, what will people do for school?
—, Chapel Hill, NC

You will slow down mankind's progress if you let ISP's call the shots. Net Neutrality is a necessity.
—Ian Fischer, Abingdon, MD

Because I don't want the only thing that's actually EQUAL to go away.
—Mackenzie Kennerly, Athens, GA

This is just wrong.
—Anna Stamus, Longmont, CO

if that gets through their will be a really big price tag on the internet. It has to be available and free to everyone not just to those who can pay!
—Samantha Ambriz, Oxnard, CA

Net Neutrality is what makes equal data sharing possible, as well as transferring ideas with no middle man to block them out. Net Neutrality is essential to the very essence of the internet and what it stands for. So for the love of god, please do not strip the citizens of the United States their right to free unrestricted web access.
—Natalie Adam, Greenwood, IN

I do not agree with net neutrality. Having to pay more just to view a website is unfair for everybody.
—Jasmine, Columbia, SC

No thanks
—Jennah, Montclair, NJ

I don't wanna have to pay to got to a website that was made for everyone to enjoy for free. It's a Computer not a Television!
—Ian, Hubert, NC

It seems like in this day and age the legal system can't do anything right, the least they can do is allow everyone access to reliable information without outrageous prices. Not only that, but by not allowing websites to be seen by people, it will negatively impact small and large businesses due to lack of traffic. Eventually society as a whole will collapse due to terrible governing, let everyone have a free and open internet to avoid speeding up the process of another possible revolution.
—Nathan, ,

Please do not let net neutrality die. This means very much to me, and everyone I know.
—Maya O'rieley, ,

The Internet was made a basic Human right. without Net Neutrality this law is infringing on our Human rights. this law will force people in the lowest pay roll all over the world to choose between groceries or internet. those who cant pay would be flung back 50 years. unable to keep up with current affairs and not being allowed to learn and have a say in the world politics. heck most of everyday things are done Online. bill paying. shopping. setting up small businesses. even talking to friends across the world. this 'law' will slow the world to a halt. and was made purely so some rich american companies could become even richer. this will not stand.
—Abigail Ryan, ,

—Lorena umana, Miami, FL

Keep the internet free, it's not television.
—Ana Garcia, Clifton, NJ

The last thing you want to do is mess with a freely operating system like the internet. If you shut down net neutrality and force people to pay to use the internet, NOTHING GOOD WILL COME OF IT.
—Nicholas Snyder, Chattaroy, WA

Please fix this, it would be greatly appreciated.
—Aliana Works, Sonora, CA

Capitalism isn't everything. Knowledge is far more important to a healthy, productive society.
—Chelsi Reed, Mansfield, PA

People are low on cash already. Don't make people suffer any more because of your greed.
—Whatareyoudoing, Hanford, CA

Same speed for all
—Robert Sonnenfelt, Hayward, CA

get rid of data caps. no one owns the internet, it is property of the users and the users only!!!
—Jonathon Kulbacki, Medina, OH

I do not understand how anyone can believe that allowing ISPs to "fast track" some content and "slow track" other content does not completely undermine the very principle of democracy in modern society. The internet has become an integral part of our society and giant telecommunication corporations cannot have the right to limit or block access to content based on whether or not it receives a kick back. Please re-instate net neutrality for the future of the country.
—Pattie Lewis, Cocoa, FL

Please
—Mckinley Mccurry, High Point, NC

I may or may not be educated enough about the matter to understand all of the intricacies that are involved in this issue. However, I believe that having utility type regulations on the internet would improve both the quality and consistency of the services. Our internet infrastructure is suffering and paling in comparison to other countries', such as South Korea's, I believe because of this difference in management. I want you to consider, if you moved, what "utilities" are the first that come to mind that you need to set up. Essentially, internet service has replaced land-line telephones, and legislation needs to reflect this change. Please take this into consideration, as you make your decisions. Also, I cannot and do not blame the FCC directly for how the situation has unfolded, but I think this internet article summed the basis of the problem very well: http://www.theverge.com/2014/1 /15/5311948/net-neutrality-and -the-death-of-the-internet
—Victor Vo, Austin, TX

Please don't make the world pay for someone else's greed. The internet is the one place where we all connect as one, it's host to information, as well as entertainment. Many people can't do their business very well without the assistance of a webpage, someone so greedy as to take all this away from...well...everyone. Doesn't deserve a post with such power.

—Adam Sauter, Schenectady, NY

Please protect the Internet as we know it. We NEED Net Neutrality!
—Amy, New Britain, CT

This is SICKENING, restore the net neutrality so everyone can have the same chance to use the internet! Not to mention this deals blows against poorer people who might not be able to afford certain 'tiers' then and that means their kids educations might be in jeopardy since every school demands you to be able to write essays and such on the computer along with SOURCES which you in that case will be unable to find if you're poor and can't afford certain 'tiers'!

For God's sake! STOP TRYING TO PASS THIS LAW!
—Kimberley, ,

The internet was created as a way to send information across the world where ALL PEOPLE COULD ACCESS IT for their purposes. It is understandable that we must pay to have access but we should not have to pay for certain sites. That not only limits people who need internet for their jobs but can't afford to pay more than what they do but it also can hinder educational and research purposes of our countries students and college goers. This is not only an outrage to what the internet was created to do but it could have such a negative effect on our educational system as well as people who use the internet for their jobs that it could have a backlash that could effect us for years.
—Jessica Marcilliat, Meridian, ID

This is absurd, you cannot limit the use of the internet and begin to charge those who already pay the price for internet ACCESS. Now the government wants to charge what is going to be accessed on the internet?!
—Christopher lemus, Hialeah, FL

The information available on the internet is important. You'd never think of taking away radio broadcasts. Why do you insist on taking away this crucial portal into intelligence and understanding.

Please don't do this. This helps no one other than people who don't need it and it affects those who have little to pay as is.
—Nick C, Potsdam, NY

FCC, You are doing the American Public a great injustice in providing ISPs power over what the American Public can access. You're doing every single person living in the United States a great disservice by allowing private companies to do whatever they want pell-mell over the wishes of the American Public. This is supposed to be the home of the FREE, which means that we are supposed to be free to choose whatever content we would like to access, without having to be hobbled about what content we can watch or read. Please, PLEASE start treating broadband as a communication service and restore it to its Net Neutrality rules.
—Julie Del Cid, Los Angeles, CA

Why do you insist on trying to regulate what you clearly don't understand? Stop this!
—Bob Beardman, Byron, GA

In our economy, most of us don't have the money to fork over to our internet providers. The internet is not a luxury anymore. It is a necessity for business owners, unemployed, students, etc. I should not have to pay extra to view certain websites. I should not have to bleed myself dry to live comfortably in this country.

Net neutrality ensures that I can access a support system, help services, and other resources that support my mental health and prevent homelessness. It must be protected.
—Bailey Holloway, ,

The internet is a venue for free thought, free expression and free viewing, so long as we pay for the door to be open. I despise the idea that anyone would be able to try to rob me of more money through the end of net neutrality. Its despicable.
—Christopher Nicol, ,

This will change the internet from a truly free repository for human creativity and knowledge to a plutocracy. This is not acceptable.
—Tim de Visser, ,

This is unfair, especially for families who can barely afford internet, what if a student has to do homework and can't access the site because he doesn't pay to access it, it's dumb
—Alexander mcleester, Pompano Beach, FL

This is an affront to free speech.
—Zachary Butler, Kissimmee, FL

This is really annoying :\\
—Yukiko, ,

Keep the internet free! Having a method of internet access is no longer an "option" in today's society it's mandatory. Everything from homework to job applications is online and killing Net Neutrality will destroy internet startups before they can even start!
—Wade Goodell, Manchester, MI

An open internet benefits everyone.
—Harold Bellemare, ,

Aside from the serious threats this poses to the capacity of the internet as a communications service, and the capacity of small companies and startups to do their business effectively, we should not coddle companies such as Comcast and Verizon. These companies are, or at least strongly appear, to be monopolies, are openly non-competing, and frankly their service is already not especially good; please do not give them free reign to be completely terrible.

Please don't do this.
—Stacey Lenaghan, Sunderland,

What you are doing is loathsome, not only does it violate the rights of those who have access to internet (and certainly those who had access before this vile proposition was passed), but, cash strapped as everyone is these days, it's obvious the only purpose of net neutrality is to line your fat pockets. You should feel ashamed of yourselves.
—Olivia Gibson, ,

Since I have limited means , not just for using the internet for orginally fun things, it also would take away my rights as using it for paying my bills online as well as trying to keep in contact with my extended family please do not take any of these rights away. I want to be able to share art, share whatever with my family all over the world as well as do my normal things such as paying my bills.
—J .Slauson, Aiken, SC

don't take away a place of freedom
—Ashleigh Taylor, ,

!!!!
—Ilaria Marcis, ,

the internet is such an innovative, one of a kind medium BECAUSE of net neutrality. Without net neutrality, the internet will lose the exact ideals that it was created for - for the World Wide Web to be accessible to every user from every corner of the globe with the same treatment and freedoms as any other user!
—Keiffer Austin, ,

That is a horrible idea

Let's hope we prevent this —Lucas, San Gabriel, CA

We need net neutrality!
—Aaliya Muhammad, Washington, DC

Net neutrality is needed for a healthy society and economy.
—Elizabeth Ann Gray, Bowling Green, KY

The internet is a resource and should be a right, not a privilege for those who can afford to enjoy it; this is a step in the wrong direction, since as a country and as a planet really, we should be trying to spread coverage, not restrict access.
—Kimberly Putz, Columbus, OH

This is a disgusting ruling that will be detrimental to the American people. Reclassify broadband networks as telecommunications service and preserve the integrity of the internet!
—Ae, Atlanta, GA

Why do you people always have to ruin every good thing in the world?!! I hope God will have no mercy on you all.
—Emily, ,

Restore net neutrality. Treat broadband like a communications service.
—Alexander Loznao, Hopewell, VA

I firmly believe in Net Neutrality —Jacob Odom, Hartsville, SC

The net needs to neutral.
—Derrick Upsher, Katy, TX

Net Neutrality is something important, something needed to keep the internet balanced.
—Aj White, ,

The internet is a communication service, just like telephones and letter-writing. It needs to be neutral. Please keep it that way.
—Ken, New Bedford, MA

The internet is the last truly free form of information.
—Kyle Lough, Fort Lauderdale, FL

If you kill net neutrality, you'll have a lot of pissed off freelance artists after you and trust me, it's not a fun thing to have after you.
—Mackenzie Caudill, Cincinnati, OH

wtf, man?
—Jack Pincince, Wakefield, RI

It is already expensive just to eat, live, have shelter, and have small amounts of entertainment. Please do not charge us more for accessing websites. The internet offers most people an escape from the woes of daily life, if you charge people to access so e of their favorite sites, you have now taken everything from us. Please please please do not do this, many people rely on the internet for business, communication, entertainment, etc. please do not do this, you will effectively be hurting more than you are helping.
—Noah, Akron, OH

if you'd be so kind i have no money so kindly hive me back my freedom
—Haydn Johnson, ,

End of net neutrality means the end of my small business. Period.
—Jen Tracy, Absecon, NJ

Please just do the right thing. Please stop catering to corporations ahead of people. Please remember why our country is something to be proud of. Please don't ruin that.
—Maria Carrera, Minneapolis, MN

Yeah, telling me I have to pay for different sites is crap.
—Audrey Smith, Memphis, TN

What happened to the freedom of information?
—Kaitlyn Lacey, Pittsburgh, PA

restore net neutrality. We already pay for internet access, additional fees to the same people we already pay, just to access the same thing we are already paying for, is just wrong.
—Joseph Flint, Burke, VA

Everyone should have the right to market their content to the public, but they can't do that if they have to pay unfair tolls. People can't pay taxes if they cannot receive income from their content. No one should have to choose between paying to allow their content into fast-lane access and buying groceries. Ending net-neutrality destroys jobs.
—Sarah Pace, North Wales, PA

STOP THIS MADNESS!
—Franziska Sieg, ,

This decision will allow for manipulative censorship, the restriction of those who would ordinarily create content but now cannot afford to even visit the sites they were providing for, and for the crushing of start-up businesses who would not have the funds to curry internet provider's favor in order to have satisfactory or even mediocre service to their customers. Please consider reviewing this decision.
—Natalie, Weston, MA

Keep the internet neutral
—Mary Stiennon, Madison, WI

No one organization or individual should have control over something as internationally used as the internet. The monetary boost the companies receive will be bittersweet, as many people will become incredibly disgruntled and angry with companies like Verizon for doing this. There will be violence. There will be a retaliation. Speaking from experience, the people who decide to take up a fight with this will be hell bent on their goal of restoring net neutrality. I hope you can look into the long run of this situation, and see that shit will hit the fan after the decision is finalized.
—Noah Hicks, ,

Restore Net Neutrality rules!
—Robert Smith, Cornwall on Hudson, NY

I guess you don't understand what "free speech" is, because by killing Net Neutrality you have basically just said fuck the constitution. Hello monopolies, hello unfair business practices, hello everything that the United States was LITERALLY FOUNDED AGAINST you are all now protected by law because our government can't pull its head out of its own ass.
—Aaron Undesser, Boone, NC

The people on the internet that i can connect with save my life almost daily. I can't afford to pay for website packages any more than i can afford my groceries. Don't do this to the American people please.
—Mollie Ball, Gum Spring, VA

An open internet is essential in today's society and economy. To disrupt it is to throw a wrench into a system that has brought an untold amount of good and service into the modern world.
—Garrett Schmigle, Savannah, GA

please dont fuck people over like this. This is disgusting, and just showing the fact that money matters more to people than the public's wellbeing.
—Kerrie Perrie, ,

We can't allow the government to monopolize our internet. If they do, imagine all the things they'd censor and control. We can't let this happen.
—Geovanny Corral, ,

the internet is not a television show, you can not lump various sites into packages and sell them off as deals. the internet is knowledge, it is creation, it is the sole remaining realm in which every human being can stand as equals, were they can create, where they can meet, and where they can share their thoughts and ideas. look at kickstarter, there are thousands of ideas today that would not exist without the internet, charging people just to see it, when you already charge people for it's general use? you WILL kill the internet. you will cripple the growth and advancement of our culture, of our species. we will recede to the dark ages, of ignorance, of miscommunication, and of bigotry. do you want that hanging on your concious? because i know i wouldn't.
—Terry Hill, ,

Please, we need Net Neutrality.
—Zenobia Idlebird, Orange Park, FL

Net Neutrality ensures that we all can access everything. Why should we have to pay more to access certain cites? No good answer? Well then, let's restore Net Neutrality.
—Elizabeth Burns, Jackson, WY

How the hell could you possibly think that killing net neutrality would be a good thing?
—Alexander Logan Jacobsen, Harker Heights, TX

The internet is such a wonderful platform for so much: It provides a more equal access to learning for people of all economic backgrounds than any other platform; it allows those of us who cannot leave the house often or at all to connect with other people and find support; it provides countless small business opportunities for people who may have a full time job raising a family but still wish to help support their family as well as for people who cannot hold down a conventional job; it does so much good for people - individuals and collectively - that I cannot list it all here. In a society that is becoming increasingly unequal, the internet is the closest thing we have to a level playing field. Adding tariffs will only serve to benefit those at the top, will add another layer of inequality to society, and will hurt so many people for whom the internet is a lifeline. Please stop this before it starts, before it has a chance to make society more uneven and before it starts to spread.
—E Jennings, ,

And so the gap between middle class and poverty continues to become a chasm. When I look at the world, I feel like I got last place in the 1st world lotto.
—Tera Benoit, Vidor, TX

In this era, Internet is one of the most important utilities we have, for work, school, and more. It must be protected by the government. The Internet is a public space.
—Misha Grifka, Chicago, IL

Many Americans already struggle to get internet into their home, despite many vital things are being shifted online. Such as: schoolwork, classes, and job applications. Normally, this becomes the SOLE way of doing some of these things. Having to pay extra for various things makes it even harder for Americans to access the internet. In short: it's unreasonable and greedy.
—Kaytlynn Mosher, Mc Indoe Falls, VT

I honestly will stop giving these companies money if they start doing this, I do not need TV or internet at home, I will go to the library. If they want to squeeze more money out of a working system I will vote with my wallet and stop giving them money.
—Joshua Hirn, Minneapolis, MN

Just leave the internet alone holy shit
—Vanessa, West Jordan, UT

Don't kill the internet.
—Sam Clarke, ,

Many people make a living through sites on the internet. All this does is add another expense to small businesses.
—Kyler Anderson, Dallas, TX

The internet was created to be free for everyone. Stop being greedy and let the internet remain the way it was meant to.
—Megan Goodwin, Peoria, AZ

This is a tremendous mistake - the Internet is the most important resource of the entire world, not an entertainment service. It should be protected, rather than left up to the whim of private corporations in terms of how it can and cannot be accessed. Anything else is destructive to knowledge, competition, and people's livelihoods.
—Michael Bonner, Biloxi, MS

Does this country's greed know no bounds
—Elina Niftaliyeva, San Francisco, CA

As an avid blogger I take pride in the thought of everyone being able to have a platform to express opinions they aren't able to express in other ways. When you limit such a large freedom of speech you're making it a commodity which it shouldn't be. For better or worse, people need to be allowed to state their opinions.
—Erin Kollar, Orlando, FL

The internet has always been and MUST REMAIN a safe and neutral space for discussion and dissent!

FUCK YOU, YOU LITERAL SHITS WE FINALLY HAD UNBIASED MEDIA FUCKKKKKKK YOOOOOOOUUUUU
—Tom Begley, ,

To deny the right to a free and open internet by succumbing to pressure from companies who would make us pay more for less is completely against what the FCC should be standing for! RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY.
—James Rock, Morrisonville, NY

We all have the right to net neutrality.
—Ariana Bertel, San Antonio, TX

Most people, myself included, ALREADY have a tough enough time making ends meet and this is just going to take another bite out of all of us! Now more than ever the Internet is a NECESSITY as most places only take ONLINE applications, is a place to shop for those who cannot make it far outside their homes, is a resource for education and learning (Just this year I completed my Professional Chef level one theory online) and provides a way for people to connect with family and friends. This is an infringement on everyone's rights to information and freedom of speech, and will likely ruin many online businesses. Bring back Net Neutrality!

—Ilse Flores, Chula Vista, CA

I am not paying to go on websites, I already pay for my internet I shouldn't have to pay to use the websites too!
—Ben East, ,

I feel like this isn't something that needs to be done. This shouldn't be an issue, we should have net neutrality without having to sign anything.
—Asia, ,

Stop putting a price on the internet. We already pay enough as it is.
—Tanner Hawks, Gilbert, AZ

I can't pay for books for college, what makes you think I will pay for web access more than I already do? The internet is already expensive as it is and we're the sixth on the speed so no. Why do we need this? WHY?
—Monica Rubio, Chelsea, MA

Verizon compromises the integrity of the internet in its attempts at monopolizing its services. I already pay a data plan; How I choose to use it should be MY decision, not Verizon's.

The internet a free space where anyone and everyone no matter their social economic level should be able to connect. Hindering this is in effect limiting our choice to free speech and assembly. Companies should not be able to dictate what the people can see. Don't control this.
—Kimberly Cruz, Orlando, FL

We already pay to get access to the internet. I refuse to be bullied into paying even more money for something that should not be limited or toyed with in this manner. It is utterly despicable and atrocious that you would allow such underhanded tactics to go unpunished.
—Aimee Murphy, ,

Please bring back net neutrality. We already have to pay for the PRIVILAGE to use the internet, for faster speeds, and more data. We should be able to use those as we see fix, not have someone tell us what we can do with it.
—Amy Surratt, Stewartstown, PA

What made the internet so popular was that it was FREE information.

Please restore Net Neutrality!
—Olivia Hancock, Kings Park, NY

I may live in Canada but I have a distinct investment in this issue as it'll impact our economic relationship heavily.
—Ali Leri, ,

This is absolutely appalling. The very notion of fast and slow lanes on the internet is also quite ridiculous. Please do not let this happen! The internet needs net neutrality if there is to be any chance for improvement in the years to come
—Thomas Duda, West Dennis, MA

The internet has always been an open place where people can share their works, passions and interests with others. To take this away from billions of people is unacceptable and will even affect people's main source of income, forcing them to choose between food and water or purchasing a new tier package to even access the sites that get them their clients. This could destroy peoples lives and I, for one, am not going to stand for it.
—Chris, ,

The glory of the internet is that I choose what I want to access. Not a company, not a provider, ME. Imagine if oil companies could tell you where you could drive your car? Or shoe companies could charge you extra for walking on non preferred paths? I do not want this to happen to my internet.
—Tabitha N De Forest, San Diego, CA

Fix it
—Belle Nguyen, Pearland, TX

Net Neutrality is a necessity for everyone and we should not allow the companies that already make massive amounts of money suck us dry for connection to things we already had. We are going backwards with this and it is going to hurt us all. Even the companies that think they're going to profit from this. Going backwards in anything only hurts everyone. Keep net neutrality and remove this completely reversing decision from law. No one wants to go backwards into the future.
—Kevin Somers, Reno, NV

The internet has always been an equalizing space and a resource to humanity. Keep it that way.

—Letitia Pinter, Longmont, CO

It's important to me that information remains unrestricted. With money tight as it is, I don't want to pay even more to access the information that has and should remain open to all.
—Chris Prevedel, Laramie, WY

The Internet is and should be a open domain for everyone, not defined if they are able to afford it. It's a place where people can communicate freely, share freely, develop even a steady income. Killing net neutrality kills not only wallets, but also people's entire livelihoods and relationships. I don't want to worry about paying extra just I can keep in touch with my cousin from Canada or hear my aunt struggling to choose between keeping food on her table or buying a tier to for her online website. Net neutrality is very important to everyone. Please keep it alive.
—Rose, Rockaway, NJ

The internet is a public place and cannot be owned by the private domain.

The potential for the damage this will do to small businesses whose primary income comes through affordable access to sales-spaces online ALONE should restore Net Neutrality.
—Tasia Kinzle, Vermillion, SD

This is very important.
—Grant McIvor, ,

The Internet is a place for freedom and relief. There should be no reason that it should have to be paid for in order to fully use.
—Brandon Hill, Eagle River, AK

This is like the fifteenth Net Neutrality petition I've signed. America does not want this. This will fundamentally destroy what the internet was founded on.
—Zach Ott, Trenton, NJ

I can't afford paying for sites I visit often —Steven Harjo, Jacksonville, FL

Fix it or you'll have a country riot on your hands.
—Tamara, Beverly Hills, CA

Controlling the web limits creativity. The leaps and bounds that we have all enjoyed through the freedom of internet media, the creativity, the ability for people to find new ways to support themselves, especially in a time when it costs more and more to live... what we do to the internet now has massive, crazy impacts on our culture and our future. We can alienate ourselves and each other, or we can keep the net and our future safe. Being able to talk to my grandparents through the internet likely will soon become a premium. A premium to talk to family?! I use the internet for content creation too, and if restrictions were imposed, how much of my lost market can I invoice you for? The Consequences are hugely far-reaching, and I am certain that your internet market research is tunnel-visioned and lacking if it is believed that a restricted, premiumised internet, on top of the cost of internet services already, is a good thing. Side comment: I mean really, as an e-learning tech support I have enough trouble with people and their company network security blocking their training programs, with their IT departments just going "it's because possible viruses" and doing nothing to help. That is the microcosm and if it becomes the norm, so, so many things will dry up and die.
—Karla Anker, ,

I believe we should restore net neutrality. I never want to have to make the decision to chose between faster internet or running water or groceries or any one of a number of utilities.

net neutrality is an issue of global importance. I feel completely disheartened and betrayed by my government and its agencies. This should have never been an issue. We didnt even want anything doner. doing nothing is something the government excels at. but now you have to do something. restore net neutrality immediately.
—John Bonneau, Vista, CA

In some ways this is even worse as a foreigner. So much international traffic has to pass through the US, and the effects on our traffic passing through doesn't even seem to have been discussed yet. .. This is obviously on top of how just plain horrible the loss of neutrality in America alone is.
—R James Bradshaw, ,

—Jake Trower, Saint Marys, GA

Broadband networks must be open, accessible, reliable and affordable for everyone. This is an issue of freedom of information, speech, and expression. There is a reason that many countries count unfettered internet access as a human right.
—Jeanne Stevens, Tacoma, WA

Net Neutrality is the lifeblood of internet innovation. It's why small startup companies that figured out how to do things better than established companies can have a fighting chance. This must be protected.

Net Neutrality is the one bastion of the free flow of information that remains. Even if comcast holds it's monopoly over internet providing (We should Apply common carrier laws to their infrastructure), at least this way new and relevant information isn't barred from entry to a global stage, or even a local stage. KEEP MONEY OUT OF POLICY MAKING AND RESTORE DEMOCRACY.
—Stefan F Petrmichl, Ann Arbor, MI

Please don't screw us over. We're already pretty screwed.
—, Pleasanton, CA

Is it really necessary to charge us more for something that still isn't available for everyone in their own homes? No, it isn't, and it should never be. Why does this scam keep coming back if sop many of us agree that it shouldn't go through. Times are already tough for many individuals trying to pay off college loans, mortgage payments, and basic TV. Why put a price on websites? It won't create jobs, it doesn't benefit anyone except those who can gain cash from it. Quit trying to mess up a well established, and free system, to those how can afford Xfinity, or go to a public library.

This is a mistake. This is a grave, terrible mistake. There will be pure hell to pay for this. The economy will suffer. Ingenuity will be crippled. The civilian revolt will be massive, and you will have no idea what power you have unleashed by sparking this crippling legislation. Net Neutrality is a must-have for a society of freethinkers. It is now even more evident that you have no desire to promote liberty; you only appeal to your wealthy benefactors. You are shit, your system is shit, and you will pay the price for your abhorrent decision. Note: don't mistake this for some violent threat. This is the rant of someone who will rally with millions to shut your shit down.
—Robert Wilt, Greenville, PA

We don't want slow internet lanes!
—Jacqueline Bondurant, Melbourne, FL

Making a full internet access only be for the privileged for more cash is probably the most terrible idea your board has had thus far, to be entirely honest. Not only will it affect customers who will be interested in your service, as they have had everything on access and suddenly you are demanding them to spit out more cash if they want access again, you are making the world wide web a private area for those who have enough money to not care about this. Which is frankly not very many people at the moment. I hope you people have been keeping up with the state of affairs with economy. If people had to choose between more internet and food, they would pick food. Sorry to say, you will lose clientele so hard and fast it will hurt.

What about small businesses? What about independent contractors who use the internet as a source of income? The people of this country demand that the country stay BY the people and FOR the people - not for corporations. Stand with your people. Stop being money hungry cowards. Protect the rights of people to make income through their own means. This isn't the country that I used to be so proud to be part of.
—Lily Williams, Orinda, CA

The internet is the epitome of freedom of the press & freedom of speech, not only in the United States, but worldwide. By surrendering the "neutrality" of the internet to corporate interests by allowing ISP's free reign to discriminate in their granting of access, based, of course, on how much a smaller company or individual user can pay, you are only acting against real democracy and allowing, once again, those with the most money to make decisions for, and take away the rights of, the rest of us! Look at the fact that huge ISPs are trying to sue Public Utility Districts over the PUD's opting out of paying for a corporation like Comcast to own the entirety of their community's internet access. You are rewarding and actively encouraging corporations to sue for the imagined right to own all access points to a giant, de-centralized, worldwide, human-created network of information sharing. That is despicable. It's like privatizing every library in the world so that access is only granted to those who can pay the door price. Individuals create internet content, just like individuals write books, yet some corporation owns my ability to see that content or read that book? It's disturbing enough as it is, without this further blow to our individual creativity and freedom. And the sad thing is that a federal institution, supposedly created for and by the people, is instead so deeply in bed with giant corporate interest that you at the FCC would rather hand over the gateway to greater knowledge, greater understanding, greater communication, greater connection to other human beings, and greater progress of the human race in general, than see your corporate buddies go without one cent that they believed they are owed. Way to go halting human progress, FCC. Way to go.

The open internet has worked completely fine for the past two decades. There is no need to allow an ISP to make a profit off of restricting certain websites and slow down anyone's connection at their will. It's evil and greedy. Not to mention that the internet should not be governed by anyone. It belongs to all those that can access it.

—Tes Mariano, Beverly Hills, CA

The internet is supposed to be a space of freedom and expression. It is nothing short of discrimination to only provide services to those that can afford higher packages. Even the lower middle class deserves to have their ideas hear, their pleasures fulfilled, and their minds enhanced. The internet is a mode of contact for the masses, not a plaything for the wealthy.
—Darcy DeAngelis, Spencerport, NY

The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening.

Give us back net neutrality!
—J, Garland, TX

Computers today have become more and more important, and is no longer a privilege to have in today's society; it is an essential to life, especially in this country. Due to this, if companies start charging families to pay more to visit specific websites, then many families will be negatively affected by this. If ISPs are blocked, students will not be able to get homework done if they cannot access the correct websites because they cannot pay to access it. People who are trying so hard to find a job will be unable to find a job since some people are only able to apply online. To have struck down the Open Internet Order is ridiculous.

There is documented evidence that, when internet provider Verison was in a dispute with Netflix, Verison intentionally slowed down service for consumers in order to put pressure on Netflix. With a loss of net neutrality, customers will be put in the position of being inconvenienced, or shut out, of services that ought to come by default. In this current age where computer and internet access is a necessity, the process of slowing access will further disenfranchise the already disenfranchised, and will potentially limit access to educational materials. I strongly urge you to reevaluate the decision presented here, and protect net neutrality.

—Cassandra Mullen, Nashville, TN

END NET NEUTRALITY!
—Aaron Varkonyi, Miami, FL

Not restoring Net Neutrality is going to harm an enormous amount of businesses, journalists, and bloggers. Internet access is already getting expensive, and not keeping it open and accessible for all users is unfair in every way to them.
—Brandon Walker, Houma, LA

its like the courts want our economy to die in a hole.

This is bullshit, and the internet should have restrictions and discrimination. FCC needs to back off and just stick to television
—Alexis Rae Kent, Hazel Park, MI

This is wring. This would limit the ability of the multitude of Americans who are unable to afford other news sources to be informed.
—Miriam Thew Forrester, Marquette, MI

Don't take away our rights as human beings, whether we are rich or poor. Class warfare is already a big enough problem in day to day life, why should it be dragged into the internet as well?
—Josh Murphy, Cincinnati, OH

The point of the internet is it is freely accessible by everyone, this would counteract the whole principle the internet was built upon.
—Robyn Maxwell, ,

America sucks.
—Darlene Ward, Corona, CA

I don't want to pay to browse free websites. Only thing its making better are the people who did this wallets

The internet is not like the TV. They are two different things.
—Fernanda Gamez, Laredo, TX

I really wish you wouldn't screw the internet okay bye
—Tiwalope Anyansi, Greensboro, NC

The Internet was designed as free use tool for everyone. The equivalant of what is happening now is the same as a municipal city saying "As a resident of our town, your basic water package will consist of us pumping it to your house untreated, and we won't worry about line blockages to your residence. But if you upgrade your water bill, we will filter out the human waste, add Iodine, and guarantee a fast, and healthy public water experience. Our mega bonus package does all that AND if you experience any line problems, our certified staff will be there within 24hrs to remedy the problem". You're taking a public service, and privatizing it. And the only reason it passed is because of lobbyists. Lobbyists do not speak for the people. The people speak for the people. And are saying YES to net neutrality and NO to corporations capitalizing on our internet
—Mackenzie Parr, ,

People already hate pop-up ads, youtube ads, and really ny kind of ad with a burning passion. Do you really think paying for the internet like TV channels would at all be appreciated?
—Emily Mount, Van Nuys, CA

The Internet was created open for people to express themselves; when it's part of America's culture, now - or even the world's - it's not right to take that away.
—Paige Stumpf, Columbia, IL

I have the legal right to view whatever content I wish, and you have no right to censor it.
—Holly Hinski, Pasadena, TX

The internet is not TV and TV companies have no right to try and rip the rights away from internet users because their services are out of date. Your COMPANY should adapt to fit CHANGE. The CHANGE should NOT be prevented or altered to suit your COMPANY. The internet is NOT your money-making machine.
—Thomas A. Hale, Sebastian, FL

If the internet is destroying television like many TV Executives and money grubbers think they are, how about making BETTER TELEVISION.
—Jojo Schutz, Lapeer, MI

We need Net Neutrality. Lossing Net Neitrality will. Make it much harder for new companies to build and support websites for there businesses. This will severly hurt the economy and only keep money in the hands of the people who already have money. Net Neutrality must not end!
—Natahaniel Barber, Jamaica, NY

This is absurd.
—Rain, Towson, MD

I do not approve of this!!!! Stop trying to make us pay more for everything when you won't even do anything to make it easier to pay for them. Stop lining you pockets with our hard earned money.
—Reginald Davis, Leominster, MA

—Kameron Gauthier, Greene, ME

If you don't the middle class will die, and you can say goodbye to any new innovative businesses!
—Ciara Pritschet, Brainerd, MN

This is an insult to all of the world, to force such a vile and monetarising stunt. Internet costs enough to begin with, to force others to pay for it further, and to limit it otherwise strongly removes a majority of the connectivity of the world, and thus, the people's morale. They will rebel in time, please don't risk the people's anger, not after Fergusson.
—James Coole, , how stupid can it get....

—Shane Kinsey, ,

Really, I mean really? What are you thinking? The internet should be for everyone, not just for those that can afford to pay through the nose for it.
—Robert Tindale, ,

This is unthinkable. The Internet isn't U S property. Stop trying to wring your citizens dry. This will kill online businesses. Crazy!!

—Noah Schatzline, Miami, FL

This is bullshit, guys. It's the internet, leave it be.
—Miranda Ireland, Denver, CO

Absolutely appalled at the gall of some service providers to even think this was a good idea. The Internet is a tool for everyone-- and limiting it is going against the basic rights of freedom. I feel like the USA is turning into a money hungry dictatorship. Disgusting.
—Tara McMullin, ,

In the new age of Internet, many people receive their income from the internet; artists, people who source their income from eBay, people who teach information, etc. the internet is useful for so many things and if we take away those things to people who don't pay money. Many will have to go without. I know from personal experience, in the certification program for vet assissting you have to watch informational videos on the subject matter before you take the test. When the internet is running slowly it is impossible to listen to those videos and absorb any information. These videos are what got me certified, what secured me a job in the career I love. I may only be 17 "still a child" but I know that if you limit peoples access to the internet nothing becomes better. It only regresses.

—Noah Stephens, Jeffersonville, IN

RESTORE NEUTRALITY!
—Steven Howard, Yuba City, CA

Do I really need to state the obvious.
—Mark Gutierrez, Elkridge, MD

DON'T DO IT
—Andrew M, ,

Net neutrality is what keeps people using the internet. You can bet your ass that the moment people have to start paying to use the websites they want, less and less people will be using the internet. Trust me. Also, what about the people with out cable? Would that mean they can't use the internet? No way man. No way.
—Emma, Pottstown, PA

I make my living, express myself, and build my relationships through the sites I visit. I barely have enough money to get by as it is, having to pay more based on these sites will end that for me. Isolating me and breaking any chance I have at making a name for myself. Give me back my net neutrality!

—Rachel Keith, Fairfax Station, VA

Why take away more rights to people? Most pathetic law I've ever heard of. Greed should not overpower rights.
—Janae, ,

It's so important to maintain a neutral and even playing field in Internet communications. This is the forum that connects all of humanity to one another and putting a price on that connection and treating it like a commodity instead of a cultural outlet is simply shameful.

this is so stupid
—Abbey Griffiths, ,

Freedom
—Desiree Marie Pommert, Kendallville, IN

This is garbage. The wonderful thing about the internet is the fact that it is free.
—Ekaterina Nickless, De Soto, MO

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed.
—Sami Costanilla, Sacramento, CA

My financial life depends on the internet and if it gets any more expensive than it already is I'm screwed. Please actually care about the people who purchase from you, and we will always support you.
—Seth, Palm Springs, CA

This is not a business practice. This is a wide spread scam.

—Max Vitori, Carlinville, IL

This needs to be taken to the Supreme Court.
—Byrd Ison, Lake Park, GA

why did they even think ending net neutrality was a good idea
—Julia Roesler, Rolesville, NC

The internet needs to be treated as a space where everyone can connect with each other and access a huge wealth of information, not a commodity that can be bought and sold to the highest bidder. This affects every American citizen with internet access and it is in those people's best interest to restore net neutrality. Thank you!
—Bernard Joseph Miltner, Port Saint Lucie, FL

Basically limiting what sites you can access until you can pay them more is ridiculous. Stop fishing for more money to pay off debts we shouldn't even have. Leave what the people can use equally alone.
—Eren Mathis, Seattle, WA

Are you kidding me? The web is basically the only semblance of freedom we have left. Take that away and what are we? Cattle.
—Sergio Babel, ,

This affects not just the United States, but people worldwide. None of us, in the States or overseas, want to see the internet ruined like this.
—Georgia Rusbatch, ,

DO NOT DO THIS. I NEED THE INTERNET TO GET MONEY. I AM A FREELANCE ARTIST. DON'T —Krayton Williams, Cheney, KS

Stop trying to destroy the internet and actually listen to the people that use it! Restore net neutrality and let the internet stay free!
—Erica Ortlip, Bristol, PA

This is gross, the internet is one of the few places where people are free, real free.
—James Kusz, ,

Please do not think with your wallets on this initiative. The internet has provided breakthroughs in access to narratives and information and adding in a price to that defeats the entire purpose of free information exchange that can benefit all of humanity.
—Chris Sogge, Tucson, AZ

Killing net neutrality will be the downfall of the internet.
—Nichole Sinclair, Windham, NH

I don't want corporations telling me which sites i can and cannot go to. I do not want to pay more for "premium" sites. Doesn't the internet cost enough money already?
—Devon, Greenville, NC

I am a student, author, advocate, and artist. This destroys much of my freelance income; now I'll have to choose if i can afford certain sites that would grant me more income or having a week's worth of groceries -on a student's budget-.
—Joy Farley, Lawrence, KS

Don't send anything to me.
—Sophia Muller, Cranberry Twp, PA

I already pay for internet as it is. This is some bullshit to have me pay for websites that should be free. That's the entire point of the internet. Access to knowledge for free.
—Anastasia Graf, Blacksburg, VA

Why would you even "kill" net neutrality? People need this so they can make a living. Seriously. Get it together government.
—Newton Geiszler, Rapid City, SD

why the fuck would you do this —Robbie Cregg, Saranac, NY

Not only does this ruling overpower internet providers, it is also unfairly biased against the poor.
—Sarah Lindsay, Suncook, NH

With Net Neutrality, you'll be killing the internet.
—Marta, ,

This is goddamn ridiculous. Just leave the internet alone. I already pay enough for internet access, I'm NOT going to pay for specific sites! I swear to God or the demon god of whoever came up with this that I will go to go back to actually talking to my friends on the phone before I'd even CONSIDER paying ANYTHING FOR ANY WEBSITE EVER.
—Leah Mathis, Bloomfield, NY

Net neutrality only enables companies to restrict information to customers. The press is not a privilege.

—Ella Bryson, ,

Keep the Internet open for all.
—Shawntel, Los Angeles, CA

As an already in debt college student having free internet helps me with projects, such as research, and helps me look for jobs, be it part-time or professional. The internet helps me to communicate with family and friends across the world. Taking this freedom away is taking away my freedom.
—Kim Celine Goyena, Benicia, CA

I may not be a citizen of your country, but this will unavoidably impact the world as we know it in a horrible way. Let this not be the last time I can take action such as this on the world wide web.

How much will it take before you stop ignoring the population?
—Michael J Kwiatkowski, Reno, NV

THIS IS INSANE. HOW CAN THIS EVEN BE A THING THEY COULD CONSIDER OKAY?
—Ashley Townsend, Land O Lakes, FL

Do we want to look like China and North Korea? Do we want those who say that the US is actually a tightly controlled police state to be proven right? America is supposed to stand for freedom and individuality, and innovation, not oppression and repression. Restore net neutrality.
—Laura Christine Fitzsimmons, Gainesville, FL

The internet was originally made to be free to all. Now everyone's up in a tizzy because their kids can use it just as well as they can, and search on it just as easily, too. I get that it can be an issue, but people shouldn't pay to make it worse for everyone. If THEY are the only ones with the issue, they can change it on THEIR computer, NOT for the rest of the country's! If we don't get Net Neutrality, I'm going to renounce my citizenship as an American and move to the United Kingdom, and talk shit about everyone in the American government. The stereotype is already around that we're dumb, fat, money grubbers. Do we REALLY need to continue that stereotype? What happened to being able to have some way to express ourselves in an unbiased forum? This is no better than North Korea and China and the way they conform everything about their societies so that they can have mindless drones doing whatever the hell they want.

I don' understand why anyone would want to limit freedom, unless the only thing they care about is money. oh, wait...
—John Feuz, Roseville, CA

Keep the internet free and accessible to everyone!
—Kendra Sauer, Spokane, WA

Net neutrality is an important tool for freedom of speech and access to information, as well as innovation. With our economy as it is, there is no good reason to make this change. The companies that would benefit from this change are already profiting from their users, this gives them the ability to extort more money for providing the same service.
—Jeffrey Dorney, Lynnwood, WA

Help me! Help you! Help me!
—Susanne galvan, Fresno, CA

What the hell are you old guys thinking?
—Patrick Lewis, Etowah, NC

We have rights too assholes. You shouldn't get control over any of this.
—Lisa Viles, Casselberry, FL

REALLY?!?!
—Emerald Amberwood, Hinckley, OH

Don't do this. The Internet is a place where anyone can be heard. Don't take that away and make it just like TV. If Net Neutrality dies, ISP's can maje certain sites harder to get to, some, maybe even impossible. This is a travesty for free speech.
—Noah Casey, Dillsburg, PA

You need to restore Net Neutrality. There are many reasons why, but I'll tell you the one that means the most to me: The Internet (and specifically, friends I've met online) has STOPPED ME FROM KILLING MYSELF on numerous occasions. If it wasn't for those friends, or those certain websites to distract me, help me, or let me talk to someone in real time when I wasn't able to talk on the phone, I WOULDN'T BE ALIVE TODAY. Please, please restore Net Neutrality. You honestly don't know how many lives you could be saving by restoring it.
—Bridget, Chelmsford, MA

Keep net neutrality!
—Mariah Chappell, Dripping Springs, TX

A lot of people including some of my friends rely on the internet to run a business. Without access to their websites, people will not know about or be able to order from them. Also, this could create issues in school where lower income students can't access as much information and/or help as higher income students. This will only increase the gap between low and high income families, and the amount of sites you can access/speed of your internet connection will become yet another status symbol leading to bullying/exclusion. Don't let this happen!
—, Rancho Cucamonga, CA

this will massively impact schools that already have low funding and will not be able to afford the 'fast lane' prices for student research. such schools rely on the internet as a means of better literature and research, especially if they don't have a school library. thr takedown of net neutrality will only hurt our future generation.
—Denae Brager, Hudson, WI

CONGRESS DOESNT GIVE A SHIT ABOUT ANYONE BUT THEMSELVES.
—Shatia, Fort Lauderdale, FL

this is paramount to removing the right to free speech
—Lindsay Farrell, Annapolis, MD

This would lead to a violation of human rights; considering that access to internet is one of them, monetizing the internet means reduced access to anybody who has no means of affording it.
—M Woodcock, ,

This is classist and disgusting.
—Nicole Soza, Tallahassee, FL

The only reason the internet works so well is because of net neutrality. Don't screw us up in one more way in favor of the internet corporations.

Why are you guys so desperate to get our information? It shouldn't be YOUR business. Not everyone is a criminal, yet you're treating everyone who touches a computer like one. Minors, men, women, whoever. It's scary and completely stupid.
—Hope, Nashville, TN

The fact that net neutrality was struck down is absolutely sickening.
—Benjamin Arrighi, Fairfax, VA

Net Neutrality is something that you can't just take away without hurting a large number of people who rely on the internet.
—, Greenville, NC

As someone who uses the internet primarily as a means of communication with those elsewhere-- a "telecommunications service," if you will-- I find it nonsensical that this still needs to be done. Go find yourselves some other loopholes with which to gouge money from us, Companies. This, what you're trying to do now? Nobody wants it, and nobody will ever want it, no matter how you try to spin it. Christ.

I shouldn't have to pay to run a business or take classes for school.
—Chanda Kauffman-Harley, Inverness, FL

As a librarian, I am very concerned by this threat to the Internet as we know it. An open Internet is essential for the spread of information that characterizes a modern democracy. In addition, a tiered Internet is devastating to small businesses and organizations.
—Claire LaPolt, Los Angeles, CA

wtf
—Natalie Lloyd, Hudson, OH

Net Nuetrality is essential!
—LuLu Bee, Seal Beach, CA

The fact there has been such an uprising in public support for striking down tiered pricing, indiscriminate blocking, etc demonstrates the power of corporations over our elected officials. THIS HAS TO STOP!
—Dan Krause, Manhattan, KS

Trying to force people to play for the internet is not going to impact anything positively. To suck more money out of consumers is not going to kick-start the economy???? You need to put money into your companies, not try to get more, you idiots.
—Samantha Ann Pedersen, Bristol, CT

You guys.. The internet is meant for all of us to come together as communities to laugh, to cry, to share, to inform, to educate, and whole slew of other things. This isn't fair for ANY internet users AT ALL. This has to stop, the internet isn't supposed to be like this. It's unfair to those of us who use the internet to sell items that we make by hand, things we work hard to create. It's unfair to those of us who have friendships that were formed over the internet. It's unfair to those of us who use the internet as a place to have fun, to enjoy ourselves, to talk to other people who can relate to us, to every single internet user out there. The internet has become a place where people go to relax and learn and have fun, it's become essential to our culture. The idea that ISPs could limit what people view unless they pay even more for them is just atrocious. Many, many people are having a hard enough time with money as it is, this should NOT be allowed to be yet ANOTHER reason finances are a struggle. Another person's GREED should NOT be the reason myself, and THOUSANDS - no, MILLIONS - of other people have limited access to the places online they love. Net Neutrality is essential and THIS SHOULD NOT BE ALLOWED TO HAPPEN.
—Amy Blacklock, Albuquerque, NM

A storm is coming big and heavy if don't restore Net Neutrality!
—Nayram Gasu, Brentwood, NY

What comes next? This is ridiculous and should under no circumstances be happening. Will be sharing this petition like nothing else
—Melanie Ziegler, ,

NO
—Jeremy Montaneous, Alexandria, VA

In a perfect world, active and informed citizens wouldn't have to go to you. We would be able to practice real, actual democratic action. But this isn't a perfect world this isn't a perfect system, and because of that money has become more important than speech. Please, keep the system from getting even less perfect. Not a single step backwards.
—Sean Osborne, Prattville, AL

Why would any of the general public want this? NO ONE.
—Kalynn Chang, Rapid City, SD

fucking stop it
—Jake Bronstein, Albuquerque, NM

This is BULLSHIT and whoever came up with this idea should be fucking FIRED.
—Antonia Bennett, Port Angeles, WA

Net Neutrality is so important to us all! Please think about the consumer and not the corporation!
—Danielle Firestone, Bethlehem, PA

Why would you ever decide to do this? Why do we always have to pay for shit. What the actual fuck is wrong with you? Just because YOUR ass can pay for this, doesn't mean everyone else can you asshats.
—Khadirah, Toledo, OH

This deeply effects my business as a cosmetologist, seeing as most of my clients find me through my website and social media accounts.
—Kiara Nieves, Lehigh Acres, FL

Don't fuck this up.
—Michael Nachman, Seattle, WA

I'm not gonna pay for tumblr like heeeeeeelll no
—Norma Spencer, Pickerington, OH

This is like phone companies restricting who you can call without paying them more. "You want to call in a pizza? Sorry you'll have to upgrade your package!
—Jacqueline Terrier, Fort Payne, AL

this is highly ridiculous. leave the internet be. restore net neutrality.
—Kristen, Lafayette, LA

The end to net neutrality means the beginning of a classed internet, which is reprehensible.
—Jessie Gaston, Mesa, AZ

I understand that ISPs could make a lot of money with net neutrality out of the way, but the internet is a resource unlike any other that so many people can access. internet connects us with information, education, other people and so much more. without net neutrality the internet will become an exclusive privilege instead of the accessible resource that it is.
—Rachel Horne, Biddeford, ME

This is taking away freedom
—Caitlin Nelson, Minneapolis, MN

I'm sorry I thought this was america
—Alec, Fort Worth, TX

Seriously, no one has money to spend on visiting their favorite sites. Please do not do this.
—Roman Brown, Bremerton, WA

Taking away net neutrality really destroys the purpose of a relatively free open communication space. The internet isn't television with assigned controlled content through certain channels. Various people use the internet to stay in contact with loved ones, and even run personal business. As a freelance artist myself, I'm accustomed to and even depend on being able to communicate through social media websites and places where I can post my art online without added fees. Please don't let the internet to become a pay to succeed service.
—Jeremy Rice, Ypsilanti, MI

Getting rid of net neutrality makes no sense. Everyone already paying to have internet acess and even those who go where using computers/lap tops/ and wifi is free like library's for example, should have access to any website that is not within reason restricted like military or really sickening sites that show death or are posted without morality taken into consideration or pornography sites that already require payment.
—Tiffany Stephenson, Spokane, WA

This is potentially another blow to America's middle class! !!!!!!
—Dionne, Sicklerville, NJ

My only comment is that companies have no right to make people pay even more money just to have faster internet. To put it bluntly, the internet in the US is terrible and companies should not have this kind of controll over the internet. This is the 21st century, not the late 19th century with monopolies having more controll over everything, than the government does.
—Michael Gillespie, Ft Mitchell, KY

Please restore net neutrality. In my everyday life, the internet is like a safe haven for me. Please help save it.
—Abby Bigham, Zionsville, IN

do nOT
—Jesse David, Milton, FL

Don't even —Sadhana Pittala, Bethesda, OH

this is sick
—Emma LaLiberte, Needham, MA

I don't understand why anyone with a single shred of sense would approve of this. This means that you, too, Supreme Court Justice Who Approved Of Removing Net Neutrality, will have to suckle on the big digital tit that is Verizon, AT&T, Sprint, and so on.
—George Toulson, Sarasota, FL

THIS IS A HORRIBLE IDEA!!!!!!!
—Kerry, Glen Allen, VA

don't step on our human rights and freedom of speech! You're censoring the internet!
—Anne Lise, ,

This is not what the founders of this nation intended, we are not meant to be a corporatocracy or an oligarchy. This nation is meant to be a free Republic that represents it's people, and the FCC is not currently representing the interest of the citizens of the United States of America. My grandfather didn't earn two purple hearts and the medal of honor in WW2 so that unpatriotic fat cats could gain control of people's right to communicate freely and visit sites at their discretion. I implore you, Tom Wheeler, and The FCC to begin working in the best interest of The People.
—Bobby Williams, Springfield, IL

As a writer, and a parent, I rely heavily on multiple sites for research and educational purposes. This attack on freedom of information is nothing short of saying to those without access to institutions of higher learning "Your education means nothing to us, your ability to access information means nothing to us, and we prefer you poor and stupid." This is an attack on those who are less economically sound, and it cannot be allowed to stand.
—Jennifer Montz, Williamsport, PA

They will not succeed.
—Emmali Gabriel, Tulsa, OK

DONT.
—Melissa Horton, Thomasville, GA

I am truly disappointed with the lack of respect for net neutrality. The people making these decisions apparently have no idea what they're doing or how to treat the people using it. Restore this immediately.
—Jorel Batson, Oceanside, CA

I like being able to do my homework.
—Hanna Rahman, Morton Grove, IL

fuck this.
—Fucker, Bethel Park, PA

This is a sickening blow against freedom of information in the name of base greed. I am ashamed that an organization like the FCC that alleges to work for the people would allow this to happen.
—William Staples, Indian Orchard, MA

Because if this is how a democratic republic thinksthen I want out. Is this just another way to reduce the lower classes? You need medical advice? WELL YOU CAN'T USE THE INTERNET TO CONTACT YOUR DOCTOR'S OFFICE ANYMORE! Don't have enough money for a phone and rely on email and social media to contact work and family? GOOD LUCK TELLING YOUR BOSS YOU WILL BE A LITTLE LATE OR GETTING YOUR DAUGHTER A BABYSITTER! ridiculous doesn't cover this. Get a life and then you'll realize what net neutrality means to so many individuals as well as companies.
—Chelsea Aprill, Oconto Falls, WI

don't —Nicole Baker, Interlachen, FL

Why should america control other countries access???????
—Emma, ,

No one has the right to control the internet like this. You are ruining businesses and websites and overall enjoyment of life. we already have to play alot for internet making us pay more (with the wages that can be 7.25 and below) is unbelievable.
—Dana L., Coopersburg, PA

The internet is a communications service, and it's about time it was treated as such! Net neutrality is a vitality important, and we can't afford to let it slip through our fingers. Internet service providers are not blustering tyrants, but they will certainly consider their profits before thinking about their user base. As effective monopolies in the areas they service, they can do whatever they like without repercussion, and without our government's protection the internet could change in very real, and very negative ways. Please, this is something that deserves to be protected, and right now there are very few people in a position to do something about it. Take action.
—David Thomson, La Mesa, CA

Internet needs to be treated like a utility. There are too many hard-working small-business owners who will be screwed over by ISP's who will charge for their sites to remain visible.
—William Szendrey, Grapevine, TX

Net Neutrality is critically important. Protect people from corporations.
—Amanda Rinehart, Napa, CA

This will affect the entire world, most of my followers are from the US and I don't want my work dragged through the mud because of this

—Veronica Wilson, Carnation, WA

Such a move kills progress that would otherwise bring the world together. Rethink the value of money compared to a more vibrant world. Rethink the monetary amounts companies would pay to destroy net neutrality, because nothing is worth the cost of disillusioning a consumer group numbering over one billion.
—Andrew Maben, Bloomington, IN

Please do not take this away from us. So many people rely on the internet for their jobs or to connect with people who they love, and it isn't fair that people should have to pay more for something as simple as this. The internet was meant to be accessed by everyone, and putting a price on it completely defeats the purpose.
—Camryn Davis, Saratoga Springs, UT

The people that would benefit from this crap already have enough money. The people that would be paying for this already DON'T have any money.
—Klassina Newcombe, ,

THIS IS EXTREMELY UNFAIR
—Samantha, Brentwood, CA

why would you do yhis
—Oks, Freeland, WA

The net should not have a price tag. The same with ideas and knowledge, money has no right to limit what people can make and share.
—Kai Steward, Chicago, IL

The one place I thought was actually free is now being taken away from us... America... land of the Free... Just so long as you've got the wallet to support it

This will kill the technology age. Do not halt freedom!
—Sergio M Coelho Jr, Orlando, FL

This will affect so many people in very very bad ways. People who make they're business by using the internet, business owners, people who design websites, ect. This would be a bad move by the FCC.
—Natalie, Lebanon, OH

I don’t want it to ever come down to me choosing between groceries or purchasing a new tier package via comcast to be able to access tumblr or DeviantArt (let alone not guaranteeing I’ll even be seen by my customer base since they may not want to pay out their asses either). It doesn’t seem important to most, but I do 90% of my business online entirely.

—Sierra Cook, Clayton, NC

Net Neutrality is a big piece of Freedom of Speech, Religion, Press, etc, etc, etc. Taking this away is infringing on basic American rights. Stop trying to turn this country into a dictatorship, and let the internet be free.
—Laura Eggersgluss, Portland, OR

We need net neutrality, please don't take it away
—Claire H, Del Mar, CA

This is not okay. It's unfair and greedy and it will not do anything for the benefit of us or our people. All people will want to do is make money, the internet is suppose to be a form of release for so many people, maybe its a place of work or something, but no, now with this new freedom, companies will take away that release, companies will take away that relaxation time. The internet needs to be free, that's that.
—Christopher Williams, Owings Mills, MD

—Mackenzie Marquez, Odessa, TX

I may not be an American citizen, but what affects the internet at large affects every person that uses it. Content producers living in America will suffer from this. What legislation is passed in the US could one day inspire legislation in other countries. This begins with you, and I cannot stress the importance of this issue enough. A neutral internet means creative freedom, it means unrestricted flow of information, it means discovery and can be a positive force in the world.
—Mr. Jean-Baptiste Raucy, ,

There are people out there who can barely afford internet alone; they obviously wouldn't be able to pay to get on specific websites. I'm sure there are plenty of at-home workers that don't get a very good pay, and using the internet is part of their job. For the sake of others' financial issues, repealing net neutrality would be a very bad idea.
—Lylah Beaton, Gresham, SC

—Kate Dinsmore, Arlington Heights, IL

The internet is the great equalizer. Don't let greedy corporations gut the country for internet access!
—Caroline Hallam, Washington, DC

I know that we live in a capitalist society (unfortunately), but there is a difference between capitalism and classism and this could and would open the door for classism, the same way it has been done for television. This means that our providers now can dictate which websites I'm on. This means that they could decide that something I was doing on the internet (which was legal) was morally wrong and prevent me from doing it. There are already cable and satellite companies which don't furnish LOGO because it's a gay channel, are you going to let them start doing that on the internet too? No more gay porn? No more Human Rights Campaign website? And this could be done to any marginalized group.
—Jessica Alexander, Springtown, TX

Without Net Neutrality, there is no actual Internet -- just a sanitized, sterilized digital shopping mall devoid of life, culture, ingenuity, art, spontaneity, and honest-to-goodness humanity. We cannot do without Net Neutrality anymore than pro athletes could perform with one-ton weights chained to their feet. For all its flaws the Internet is one thing: quintessentially human. To remove Net Neutrality is to replace the beating heart of the Internet with a brick and expect the body not to die -- sheer madness and insanity. In three words: Net Neutrality NOW!
—Ryan Edgerton, Millsboro, DE

Don't ruin the internet.

—Carrera, Saint Peters, MO

Allowing companies to block or slow down certain sites is utterly stupid. These companies make more than enough money per year, and this law would effectively reduce the spending power of citizens, as we would have to pay even MORE money to avoid getting blocked or slowed down. This decision is bullshit and no one in America is happy about it
—Phil Wimmer, Mansfield, TX

Net Neutrality made my internet usability bearable on even the lowest speeds I can afford. Killing it will enable big businesses like Comcast and Windstream to discriminate and deny me the service I rightfully earned and pay for by throttling my connection speeds or even disconnecting me in favor of higher-speed, higher-paying customers. —Clarissa Harman, Paducah, KY

This move is a clear violation of our trust and our freedom. The internet has changed our lives and it's net neutrality that has made it a platform that can do so. With net neutrality gone, it is now solely a platform for the rich to get richer. My life hinges on the internet these days. The free and open internet is as important to me as running water and electricity, and it's about to get a whole hell of a lot worse all in the interest of big corporations getting bigger, and the rich getting richer. The rest of us, the little individuals and the smaller companies, we all lose. Net Neutrality was what gave Netflix, Facebook, Twitter and many, many more sites the opportunity to exist and grow in the first place, and that's just about to fall apart now.
—Max Baily, Moscow, ID

look, the internet has provided the world the freedom of speech, press, the ability to post what we wanted (from pictures to videos) as we pleased in responsibility. The government is essentially taking away that right from us Americans, and it's an injustice that they can fix and back away from.

—Victoria Silguero, San Antonio, TX

I also believe in a net neutral internet. I believe that a payment system will soon lead to the death of many free websites. What many people don't realize is that without Net Neutrality a service can slow doun the users connection to ANY website they don't like. This means that if Verizon didn't like youtube, they could slow all internet connection to youtube to a standstill. This would either force customers to PAY for connection to youtube. to think about this economically, this system more caters to the 1% (I.e verizon, comcast, and other internet providers), but there are many people who make their entire living from things like youtube, deviantart, and patreon. A net neutral web would greatly reduce the amount of people able to see their content and possibly force them to seek other jobs, thus increasing unemployment. These actions could quite possibly bring an end to a age as a free community of content an ideas are stopped by harsh fees and greedy buisness executives more focused on making a few more bucks rather than giving people what they want.

—H R., New Orleans, LA

The Internet's not limited like broadcast spectrum. We, the users, decide how much traffic goes from place to place. I pay my ISP for bandwidth; it's MY choice where I use it. A megabyte of Netflix stream costs my ISP the same amount as a megabyte of Wikipedia data, and it should cost ME the same to download, and Netflix or Wikipedia the same to upload. If any of us want better latency or a fatter pipe, let us pay for them. But Internet service acts a lot more like utilities (water, power) where you pay for flow, quality, and dependability, and a lot less like broadcast or cable where you pay for specific content. Don't let ISPs specify what they will and won't carry--the defining, wonderful value of the Internet is that bits are bits, mo matter where they come from!

—Casey Farnsworth, Osceola, IN

Greed is a monsterous thing. Embodied within this part of humanity are some of the most aggressive examples of histories greatest mistakes. Wars are caused by this, the taking of liberties. While the Internet is new, it is not a moneymaking machine. It is something that has linked the world. It has allowed communication, trading, business, and people to unite around the globe. This interferes with the expansion of an environment that has never existed before, and will never exist again. This is the single most important invention in the world and you are going to tear it to pieces. Rethink this decision in order to prevent a falling apart of the current greatest invention to ever grace the world.
—Zachary Bittle, Fort Lauderdale, FL

—Erin Shervey, North Bend, WA

As a student and as a supporter of our democratic system, I believe the very principles of democracy are being violated. We need to maintain these very important values in mind if we want to remain a democratic country. Keep net-neutrality alive for everyone's sake.
—Sonia lopez, Los Angeles, CA

I don't agree with the discrimination against any and all open public websites, or private websites as well for that matter. Internet neutrality is something that protects the consumers from unnecessary charges for internet privileges. I strongly believe this change needs to be reverted to it's original state as this change will only lead to bullying of strong companies for use of basic privileges. Furthermore, younger and smaller website owners could become endangered facing larger companies with more priviliges if this remains unchanged. I urge you to please reconsider this law not just for the little guy, but for everyone.
—Jonathan Roy Scott, Sacramento, CA

Dear FCC: Your job is to protect US, the CONSUMERS, from abuse by media companies. Your job is NOT to help pad those same companies' pockets by throwing US under the proverbial bus. If you value your jobs, RESTORE and PROTECT Net Neutrality. Don't let greedy corporations shove the Internet into a meat grinder for their own personal profit.
—Amber Thurman, Galesburg, IL

DON'T RUIN THE INTERNET! Stop being greedy assholes.

—Justin Pham, Bryan, TX

This is so unfair. I already have to pay for Internet, but to have to pay to access specific websites is just sickening. A lot of people make their living online and doing this is essentially destroying anyone's chances of making their own successful website BECAUSE NO ONE WILL SEE IT! Basically big sites stay and little sites go. The Internet should be a free space available to everyone, not another damn monopoly because we have too many of those already.
—Julia Vann, Tucson, AZ

why the fuck would you do this? Our rights are being violated just for profit.
—Bailey Wilson, Portland, OR

The internet as we know it is an essential element in day to day life worldwide. Especially in the United States, a country focused on the idea of making your own way and creating a name for yourself, making it more difficult to share and promote your work online won't help small business owners who are trying to make their way in this world. Net neutrality is important not because we need to access our favorite websites, but because the entrepreneurs and small business owners of the United States need to be able to function on the same playing field as some of the larger corporations.
—Cassandra Jones, Lake Worth, FL

Net Neutrality is a very important part of the internet. It's what lead it to be the major empire and booming industry medium that it is today. Taking away Net Neutrality will only prevent the internet from becoming even better than it currently is. It will stop so many talented artists from getting access to the websites they need in order to make money, and is just a bad idea in general. How many public outcries, protests, and movements will it take to get you to understand that the internet is just fine they way it is, and that you need to stop pulling these cash grabs.

The internet is a place where billions around the world can connect and become informed. Taking that away so that a huge corporation can make a profit is damaging and could destroy the universe that the internet has created.
—Maddie Williams, Wakefield, MA

This is absurd. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

—Alexis Haynes, Senoia, GA

OUR COUNTRY HAS TOO MANY REGULATIONS ON THE WRONG SIDE OF THE TABLE. IF YOU -HAVE- TO REGULATE SOMETHING, AT LEAST MAKE IT FAIR TO THE COMMON PEOPLE. TRYING TO TURN THE INTERNET INTO MORE OF A PROFIT THAN IT ALREADY IS WILL CRASH THE ECONOMY AND SEND OUR COUNTRY INTO A VERY DARK PLACE. PLEASE STOP THIS INSANITY.
—Skyler, Houston, TX

I'm currently in a long distance relationship, and the internet is seriously how we connect on a day to day basis. Without the internet our relationship wouldn't be as successful as it has been.
—Alexis Hutchins, Plattsburgh, NY

Stop trying to make the Internet like TV. This is horrible, and can be the end of the Internet as we know it. Money doesn't matter, the Internet is suppose to be a nice place where you can view any site you want. Not this. Please.
—Megan Larkin, Ripon, CA

The American people may not have as much money as American corporations do, but now is the time for Congress to prove it is a democracy for the people and not an oligarchy of the wealthy.
—Jeannie Harrell, Chicago, IL

This must stop!
—Alex, Chardon, OH

I am a small business who uses the net to advertise. Larger competitors who can pay to reach more clients have an unfair advantage!

What
—Te Alv, ,

Stop trying to make money off fucking everything while sending the rest of is into poverty.
—Haley Greene, Crestwood, KY

I thought that the internet was a worldwide resource not really under control of any single person, therefore how can the FCC claim some sort of ownership and control it? I mean sure we pay cable providers to allow access to the internet itself but they only charge for that. You cannot just take a resource that has no tangible ownership, chop it into little bits and then charge people more for the bits of something that you don't own. I call shenanigans.
—Gunnar Hardt, National City, CA

It is entirely unethical to leave the accessiblity of a vital communications service, which enables millions and billions of people to connect, learn, and earn their living, in the hands of greedy corporations that will try to decide what customers can or can't access, unless they cough up. This is a sickening blow to the First Amendment and basic decency. If money is "speech," then the internet is definitely speech and should NOT be restricted like this. Net Neutrality is essential to our society.
—Melanie Stangl, Pittsburgh, PA

Stop it!
—Cameron slatton, Kansas City, MO

FCC could you please stop being dicks and let people use the internet. Seriously, why would you force people to pay to make business online.
—, East Lyme, CT

This is annoying. They're ruining the internet. Idiots.
—Natalie, ,

Internet fast lanes silence important voices that need to be heard. Please do not destroy the Internet.

I enjoy using the internet, it's fun, it's SUPPOSED to be free, and now you guys are taxing more people in our failing economy. Why are you in charge again?
—, Berkeley, CA

Fuck this bullshit
—Bria Wiggins, Atlanta, GA

So. Why do people think we need to pay for speed? We are ALREADY paying for the connection. The answer is GREED. Stop trying to make this a rich v. poor thing. Stop fucking with the internet. It has no borders and does NOT need your control. Fuck off.
—Kristin Smith, Dayton, OH

I love the internet and encroaching on it to control it is a vile, deceptive, greedy, and power hungry thing to do. The government has no right to treat the internet like their property
—Tanner, Red Hook, NY

Just kill it with fire
—Alima, ,

HOW ABOUT WE DON'T DO THIS. WHY. WHY WOULD ANYONE WANT THIS.
—Emma Turner, Rockaway, NJ

The internet is the only platform that can even try and be equal for everyone to be able to have a voice. I know that the people reading this don't care but you need to know how you're destroying a free market, crushing the american spirit and chasing us away. We. Don't. Have. Money. Make this bullshit stop.
—Anjellica Trace, Akron, OH

Why would you let net neutrality die? Why? That's horrifying. The internet needs to be a free space where no one is charged extra.
—Jaide Taylor, Robinson, IL

The government is always talking about not leaving "the little guys" behind yet it insists giving all this power to a SINGLE internet provider. All of it. So bring back Net Neutrality. It's just common sense.
—Andy Guzman, Los Angeles, CA

NO
—Wheatley, New York, NY

The internet is a communications service. Making it possible for anyone to serve one client over another is wrong and goes against everything the internet was intended for, so I and the many millions of billions that use and have used it beg for Net Neutrality to be returned to us all; our freedom is being killed, and we will not stand for it.
—Jenny Higgs, ,

This is ludicrous. What exactly are college aged kids supposed to do? Inner city elementary schools don't have the funding to pay for internet! Websites are free, as they should be. What you are suggesting with this would bankrupt our nation and only the wealthy would have access to the internet. Way to shrink the middle class even more so. And even at that, you'd be making the poor poorer. This is absolutely one of the most idiotic things I've ever even heard. The fact that it's even being pushed for shows how greedy and foolish you people are.

—Shelby Michaela Roberts, Barnesville, GA

This is unjust and I'm very angry
—Julia Carnes, Florence, KY

Dont add commercial or charge money dude ill kill myself.
—Norma Vizcaino, Las Vegas, NV

Restore net neutrality before you kill America even more than you already have.
—Joe Palinsky, Colonia, NJ

The internet needs to remain open and free. As long as corporations are treated like people, protected and encouraged to suck the life and money from us it won't be. Please put an end to this.
—Deborah Friedlein, Denver, CO

Net neutrality would kill the internet. The reason internet service providers even make a dime off their shitty customer service is because when someone gets on the internet they can to to whatever site they want. Taking away that freedom by allowing the ability to put up pay walls is a terrible idea.
—Nathan Phelps, Laramie, WY

I already have enough bill's here with the Internet being pricey, I don't need to pay for 2 cable tv..
—Nicole, ,

The internet must remain an equal and free enviorment for all peoples to access and use to better themselves and each other. Many people depend on the internet for their buisnesses and livelihoods. Taking away net nutrality would damage that.
—Kaitlyn Schroeder, Placentia, CA

This is so wrong. People do business online. They won't be able to reach potential customers, because very few people have the money to actually pay to get online. We pay for wifi and internet routers and computers and memberships to certain cites, why must you take away our freedom to even get online at all? This is outrageous.
—Sam Folks, Bakersfield, CA

we already pay for the internet. these companies don't NEED more money, not like this. it's one more thing that is going classist. the internet should be a space to share ideas no matter your income. we pay for the speed we want, fine. but on top of that, you have to pay extra based on what sites you want? it will negatively impact small and individually owned businesses, creating an even wider gap between the superstores and conglomerates and businesses, and the individual. this literally will benefit NO ONE but the already rich and powerful.
—Addy D, South Burlington, VT

Pease don't.
—Kay, Stephens City, VA

Stop being assholes who want to control everything, when you die, karma will get you.
—Fabian, Las Vegas, NV

We cannot cater to these corporations and allow the internet to be filtered and throttle speeds at their own discretion. You wouldn't allow your phone provider to stop certain phone calls just because they felt like it, why is the free flow of data subject to different rules. This hurts capitalism, it doesn't promote it. This is greed at it's core.
—Raymond Kirchhof, Wayne, NJ

Please listen to the people.

—Dean Kantor, Leavenworth, KS

If Net Neutrality dies so does the internet.
—Billiam Velociraptors, Langhorne, PA

Fuck comcast
—Dillon McCabe, Watkinsville, GA

As part of the art community, I will fight for my brothers and sisters to allow them the services they deserve without having to pay excess fines just to be allowed work that would thus allow them to rerun the cycle. It's cruel to online businesses to limit what they and their customers can do by raising their fines and in turn lowering their income. Cruelty is not a part of our government nor should it be part of our culture. If a high school student can understand what's better for us as a whole in regards to this, you bet all your dreams our government ought to.
—Shou Desco, Idaho Falls, ID

NO.
—Maddie, Greenville, GA

As a middle income medical professional with a Ph.D., I could afford to pay for tiered services. Many others could not. To propose an end to Net Neutrality is to place a price on knowledge and the free exchange of ideas in the one "open forum" still available to the most people in a time when education becomes increasingly (and in many cases impossibly) expensive. That is a travesty, and morally repugnant. Please don't further this injustice; classify broadband Internet as a telecommunication service. Do the right thing.
—Amber Hollingsworth, Seminole, FL

We shouldn't have to petition this. It's a really dumb idea that literally NO ONE wants.
—Brittany Sutton, Woburn, MA

I should not have to pay for different sites that allow me to communicate with friends and family more easily.
—Sandi Alicia Yates, Winnie, TX

So I'm guessing the company's who are pushing to control the net is paying the government off? It's said when our country is run by greed.
—Shauwn Vandenende, Virginia Beach, VA

Please don't take away the only happiness I have at the end of a long day.
—Helen Spence, ,

This is total bullshit. We already pay for internet and now we have to pay more? In this economy? Stop sucking money out of everyone and at least let us have this. Honestly, this is freaking stupid.
—, Newington, CT

This is incredibly important. Don't give the internet providers the opportunity to discriminate against the lower class.
—David Malone, Oxford, OH

Fuck capitalism
—Blair, Spring, TX

I swear to god, the government is gonna make America a totalitarian state at this rate, I'm not even kidding.
—Alex Leishman, Gnadenhutten, OH

Net Neutrality is what I'd love to call BULLSHIT!
—Beth Salyers, Wallace, SC

Creating an internet hierarchy based on economic deficit will increase the ability of lower income households to access necessary things. This is a horrible decision, especially with the increase of reliance on computers and internet access

—Marissa Poel, Westmont, IL

The internet cannot be owned by anyone. Without net neutrality, it will be monopolized.
—Kathleen Caldwell, Springfield, MO

As a college student, I'm already incredibly in debt after only just one year. The internet allows me to access a great deal of helpful sources that help me enrich my education and actually get my money's worth. If limited, my grades and overall academic performance would surely take a hit and I'd be in even more debt.
—David Cumpston, Upland, CA

Internet has become such an important comodity that it should not be limited in such ways. We should look for ways to make the internet more cost effective in order for it to allow all people to connect.
—Malik Warden, Syracuse, NY

Stop bending the law to allow corporations to profit from the people. You're supposed to be one of the policing parties, not one of the guilty!
—Aidan Z Meyer, Richmond, CA

Restore net neutrality!
—Kelly Ducey, Gaithersburg, MD

Stupid corporate scum. This is ridiculous. Fix it.
—Alex Fleming, Allen, TX

The internet should remain free for good reasoning. The job market is terrible and as a post college student I can't even move out of my parents house with my husband. Please do not add one more fee to my plate. I have student loans coming soon and I barely make enough as it is. Not everything in this country needs to be controlled by money. I have the right to speak with my family on the internet without having to pay for each site or waiting forever for it to load. I'm not some robot you can control, and neither is the rest of America. Keep this country and the people's rights free.
—Brittany Estes, Saint Charles, MO

Net Neutrality is a 100% necessary way for many different types of people to share their experience, and is absolutely necessary for our culture to grow as a whole, otherwise many important persons would be unable to reach the point in their lives it would take for them to be the crucial members of society they would need to be.
—Alexander Tynon, Ovid, NY act in the best interests of the people, not the profits.

—Pawel Lijewski, Bushkill, PA

I cannot believe that anyone other than these big companies themselves would have any reason to want to get rid of net neutrality. It's baffling to me that anyone would have thought this was in everyone's best interest.
—Jillian Blenderman, Spring, TX

—Skylar, Warrensburg, MO

Do not limit this valuable form of free speech! Having to pay a third party company more to access different websites is essentially censorship of America's most beautiful ideal.
—Lauren Thomas, Berkeley, CA

This effects everyone. I don't want the internet to become like the diamond industry.
—Paul Anderson, Ithaca, NY

The internet is far more than just entertainment. It is how I learn, communicate, and express myself. Let us keep that freedom.
—Amanda Edington, Ithaca, NY

This is a space for use by US citizens, this space is created by the sum of its users and to limit access and partition content would be devastating for small businesses- larger businesses and the access to evidence necessary to correct the largely incorrect claims of mass news media. This is one step further to removing the peoples voice by keeping them in the dark, no access to information that lacks an alternative intent. You are creating a world of misinformation for your citizens. This is a great injustice that echo's the world of animal farm. If there is an end to the world, i hope you live to see it if you let net neutrality be a thing of the past. How dare you.
—Ethan Beck, Exeter, NH

This violates our freedom to express ourselves on the internet!
—Ella Jensen, Los Angeles, CA

Broadband IS a communications service, people use the net for communicating and commercing with those they meet, some submit art that they have created and other post video that they made. this is not a series of channels, this is a community of people creating things together for their own hand made entertainment to share with others.
—Andrew Murray, San Diego, CA

this is sick that i actually have to sign something to prevent this from happening

—Connor Sinclair, ,

FUCK YOU CAPITALIST PIGS
—Ben Gold, Moreno Valley, CA

Ignoring the million other reasons as to why this isn't acceptable, what about our Children? So much of their schooling relies on the usage of the internet, parents struggle to provide access with the most basic service for this as well as for people like myself, to communicate with loved ones who are long distances from me, now you're saying they're going to have to pay even more? Ridiculous. You should all be ashamed of yourselves. Personally, I think that anyone who would support such money hungry, power driven organizations should be immediately removed from their position and should be replaced with individuals who think of the nation as a whole, not the corporations who seek to take control of everything.
—Amber Ornac, Pittsburgh, PA

This is the worst possible thing you could do. Please restore net Neutrality.
—Nat Gray, Glenside, PA

The internet is a means of communication and connection. Do NOT remove the neutrality, as the Internet is the source of some people's only income. Limiting their exposure would destroy their businesses and their finances.

Don't block access to public Internet cause it's monopolizing the use of Internet. There shouldn't be a cap or better yet an additional fee for you to use the Internet. This will only expand the great Internet divided more and leave more people without Internet access.
—Michael Rocha, Eugene, OR

This is incredibly ridiculous. The internet is not a luxury anymore, it is a necessity for work and school.

At this point in our civilization, the Internet is just as much a utility as water or electricity. And since I don't get nickel-and-dimed for every glass of water I drink, I'd rather not get nickel-and-dimed for every site I go on.
—, Smithfield, VA

Seriously, FCC? We need open internet as this will seriously affect libraries too and they will not be able to afford to make digital information public with this kind of issue. WE NEED NET NEUTRALITY. NO QUESTIONS.
—Jessica Nordyke, Wichita, KS

Beware he who would deny you information, for in his heart, he dreams himself your master
—Gabriel Pratico, ,

I shouldn't have to pay for something that should be easily accessed. Don't turn the internet into cable tv
—Rogelio Ibarra, Riverside, CA

This is outrageous. It's enough that we pay for IPS service I'm not going to finance someone else's greed. The whole basis of the Internet is that it's free and anyone, rich or poor, can access any information that they want. This violates that very basic foundation and I will not stand for it.
—Alice, Katy, TX

net neutrality for the win!
—Emily McCormick, Chicago, IL

This could create a huge problem for students, professors, and all educational facilities' staff as well who are on a tight financial budget, and require access to the internet in order to succeed in (and for some, to even ATTEND) their classes.
—Nathaniel Hernandez, Tucson, AZ

What.
—Kayla Bowker, Longmeadow, MA

I'm disgusted.
—Elizabeth Coleman, Hendersonville, TN

Why are you seriously trying to destroy the internet and everything it's about?
—Stephanie Lody, Westlake, OH

It's time to stop letting big businesses run this country into the ground. Common folk aren't going to put up with this crap forever, and it's your government jobs on the line first if you don't fix this.
—Brandon Johnson, North Augusta, SC

The Internet is reaching a point where it should be a basic utility, not a luxury or a weapon that companies can use against sites that disagree with or financially threaten them. Everyone deserves the same level of global connection as everyone else, without having to stuff extra bills into the already stuffed pockets of Verizon and companies like it.
—Kasey Melgaard, Overland Park, KS

As a college student in America, I HAVE NO MONEY. So making PAY for websites that I NEED in order to graduate is ridiculous and unconstitutional. I have no money to pay for whatever else, I'm strapped for cash as it is. And I get that the American Government doesn't really care about me or people like me, but c'mon!
—Jacqueline C. Hester, Olathe, KS

This is greedy. I should not have to pay for my leisure time after spending nine hours a day at work with little pay and other bills in already have to pay.
—Jamie iannuzzelli, Rockaway, NJ

For the love of god
—Rhys Cook, Chicago, IL

Don't allow Net Neutrality to die, please. Deregulation of ISP's and their ability to limit their connections to websites based on whoever is willing to pay or not is not the popular choice among users of the internet. Keep the internet as it is, please.
—Alfred, Irvine, CA

The Internet is the epitome of free speech/press rights. Take that away, and you're the biggest hypocrites I can think of —, Elk River, MN

Wtf stop being assholes
—Dustin Bice, Spring, TX

Net Neutrality is important.
—Powell Bohler, Fort Worth, TX

This is outrageous. Now we have to PAY for something that should be free access to information, entertainment, and more? This just take the freaking cake. The US isn't much different from communist China now, seriously. It's not even thinking about the majority; this law is only helping the CEO's and other business leaders of internet providers, which ALREADY MAKE ENOUGH MONEY EVERY YEAR. THEY DON'T NEED ANYMORE. ARE THEY TRYING TO SUCK US DRY OF ALL OUR MONEY? WHAT IS THE GOVERNMENT THINKING? I'll say, this is not the government that our founding fathers planned for. Where is the representation for the regular people? Where is the representation for everyday people? WHERE IS THE REPRESENTATION FOR THOSE NOT AFFLUENT OR IN POWER? Take that into consideration.
—Haesel Nguyen, Chino, CA

JUST BECAUSE UR ALL SHIT AT POLITICS AND CANT KEEP YOU ASS CLEAN LONG ENOUGH TO DO ANYTHING CONSTRUCTIVE FOR THIS COUNTRY LIKE OH I DONT KNOW FIX THE FUCKING ECONOMY??? DOESNT MEAN YOU CAN IMPOSED LAWS ON ENTERTAINMENT THAT WILL LIMIT MANY PEOPLE.
—Oh No You Fucking Dont, Cleveland, OH

I don't know what else to say that's already been said, but the internet is the only free market that is left. I'm 14 and I feel like i've grown up on the web, but I know that if it becomes corporate many friends of mine that aren't very wealthy will be put at a sad disadvantages. I love the internet because it's a lot more equal then the real world. You're judged by your ideas, and so many have grown and become successful because of the world wide web. Stopping net neutrality will cut off this viable option for small business owners and free lance artists. please don't take away our internet and corrupt it by this capitalist country.
—Maysun Rogoway, Chicago, IL

Bring this to the supreme court with evidence that if negatively impacts everyone effected. There is evidence, because it forces most of us to choose between eating and browsing the net.
—Richard Keith, Norwich, CT

Fuck off
—Tyler Serenelli, Voorhees, NJ

Stop thinking about yourselves and think of this country as a whole. CHILDREN use the internet for EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES. Hospitals, Doctors, Medical Professionals, EMT's, and Officials use the internet to SAVE LIVES. Ordinary civilians use the internet to branch out in business, education, communication, etc. If the Courts really think that paying more for networks, is going to help anyone? It really doesn't. Cut the shit. No one wants to hear bad news anymore.
—Hannah Taylor, Babylon, NY

I'm not American, but generally what happens in America happens in Australia fairly quickly, especially with our current government. The UN notes internet access as a human right, exactly what gives your American companies the right to limit it?

The internet is not TV. The internet is a vital resource for a vast number of people - it is a database filled with lifesaving information, it is a means of communication, it is a means of unlimited self-expression. It is not television. Do not treat it like television.
—Cody Vander Clute, Vienna, VA

Please, please, please!
—Ana Urbina Urquijo, ,

This is so fucked up. Why must we pay for literally everything these days? This'll just make it harder for a lot of businesses with advertising and such.
—Annie, Spring Lake, MI

A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I’d rather not be limited even more by someone else’s greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Alyssa McCorkle, Orion, IL

Why on God's green earth would you extract even MORE money from people? Do the people in charge even realize how much we have to pay for? It's like when teachers assign kids homework and the kid has 6 classes. Each teacher will think "It's alright, it's only an hour of homework, they can handle it!" But what happens when ALL of your teachers think that? A BUTT LOAD of homework and many late nights. So please, be conscious of all the other things we have to pay for and let up a little, would ya?
—Abigail, Rochester, NY

!!!!
—Cassandra Jackowski, ,

Please don't let this happen.
—Alicia Balbuzoski, Lockport, NY

The internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential.- Not my words but the deliver the message I wanted to say.

—Malcolm mobley, Pittsburgh, PA

Bring back Net Neutrality!
—Maddy Greene, Houston, TX

Restore net neutrality please. There's no reason to give these greedy companies anymore control over the internet than they already have. Free press and free speech go a long way in helping to get the message out. Limiting people only serves their agenda. Do not give in.
—Ishmail Paschal, Dayton, OH

I think it is important to keep the internet open to users. As an artist, I sell my art through sites like Etsy. I can't afford to have to pay more to access these sites.
—Devorah, Dallas, TX

This is a major blow for the average american. For most of us, money is tight. The internet is one of the only places for many Americans to get help as most services are becoming fully automated. Net Neutrality was, no IS a good thing, that IS in the best interest of Americans of all backgrounds. Taking it away is just for the Large corporations and that's not right.
—Hannah Jackson, Clinton, MS

Um really you're going to take away our Internet stuff like I can't legally get married in most of the state's and you're turning this country into even more of a hell hole let's move forward not slide back words
—Faith Mark, Concord, NH

The internet is more than a communications service. It is at the point where it's almost a necessity to live these days and i'm sure in a short amount of time, it will become a necessity. It can save lives, allow someone to make a living even without the ability to move their own limbs, it allows for access to information that you could never get without it, and even allow you to gain an education in much less time than it would to go to a school(so long as you work hard with it). The internet in the neutral state that it has been in can evolve to become something that will propel humanity into a greater future than any of us alive today will most likely live to see at it's peek. If it were to become something that greed companies can wave around like food in a starving village, we can expect to see a much darker future come about because of the restricted access to the majority population.
—Michael Alex Atkinson, Little Lake, MI

Stop capitalizing and unnecessarily things away from people; stop being malicious and gluttonous.

The internet is suppose to be a place where we can express ourself's freely without worrying where we are going. We are already paying for the internet and the FCC making us pay more for the things we like is unjust. If they want to make more money maybe they should try doing something useful for society instead scamming everyone.

Why would you even want net neutrality to go away? The only reasons I can think of make everyone who wants it the worst kind of people.
—Greg Kobliska, Joliet, IL

I am dropping Verizon immediately.
—William Childs, Frostburg, MD

I can't believe this, this is total bullshit. No one should have the power and people shouldn't have to pay! Already you have to pay providers for internet connection and wifi and now companies run by greedy dirtbags get the chance to slow down or block websites unless you pay them?? What the hell is wrong with people?
—Cara, Buckley, WA

Why do they want to get rid of net neutrality? I mean we already pay a buttload of cash for other things.

This is absolutely both disgusting and terrifying-- why should we pay to visit normal websites? What if there's a website which helps those who're sickly and need a place where they can relate too, but in order for this to happen they have to pay to receive help? I shouldn't have to pay for mental assistance on a website-- I don't care who you are.

The internet should be free for all to obtain information and connect to others. It must stay neutral.
—Haley Brackemyre, Santa Clara, CA

As a college student, using the Internet is imperative to my education. A lot of what I do (research, looking up class-related information, such as changes to the schedule and assignments, and checking my email frequently) is made possible through the use of net neutrality. However, if net neutrality is killed, so to speak, then companies are free to take certain websites and create a "toll" that makes it impossible for frequent users (like myself) to use without paying a certain sum for. It would be unavoidable, but I don't have much money to begin with and it would be absolutely devastating if I couldn't get to my email or do proper research for my classes.

This is not okay. Internet is all ready charged by selected providers and websites are funded from the amount of views and products are purchased from the sites. This decision will cause anger and conflict between the American people. The internet is important to so many people and making every person pay for which "channels" the will receive is absurd. A free access to the Internet is the only way to give every citizen the equal opportunity in today's new technology-driven world. Rejecting net neutrality could only arise from a very skewed view of the Internet, the future of the world, and who that future should belong to (take a hint, it's everyone).
—Chloe Stabler, Louisville, CO

Why would you fix what isn't broken?
—Megan, Chicago, IL

Internet service providers are not law-enforcement agencies. They have no personal, vested interest whether or not I watch Game of Thrones via illegal download, Netflix or HBO. They should not, therefore, be able to control how much bandwidth is allocated to either of those options to essentially force me to choose one of them. By doing this, the ISP stifles natural competition, which is the driver of the capitalist market our country maintains. If the internet loses its neutrality, companies will be able to pay ISPs to limit bandwidth to certain sites making them harder to access and deterring their usage. If not for economic reasons, what about social or political reasons? Without Internet Neutrality, a partisan politician could pay an ISP to limit bandwidth to sites he/she might not want the public to see, like news sites or sites which challenge his/her political views. By removing neutrality, there is a much greater potential for heavy censorship of ideas and beliefs that would be controlled by those who have the money to influence ISPs. Preserve and maintain the internet as a public telecommunication service for the people to use as a means of cultural, social (and even economic and political) advancement to our society.
—Thomas Hoefel, Saint Louis, MO

honestly what is the government doing.
—Sarah Park, Hollywood, FL

The internet is meant to be a means of communication without borders, so setting up borders in order to discriminate goes against the beliefs of those who started the Internet and the beliefs of freedom of expression the US espouses. I shouldn't have to pay to access a website that was free before it's bad enough to pay for the service and now we have to pay to even use it
—Kelsea, Moorestown, NJ

Net Neutrality is needed for anybody to live a normal life. That's the opinion of someone who is constantly surrounded by internet.
—Autumn-Moon E. Denton, Tucson, AZ

Please correct this mistake. The internet is suppose to be neutral. No, paying to get access to websites. It's suppose to be FREE.
—Jarrod Crouch, Fresno, CA

Taking away net neutrality would ruin my life. Anyone who thinks this is a good idea is dead to me.
—Ananonymous, ,

The internet is free and a right.
—Anthony Ebersole, Folsom, CA

Net neutrality is inherent to the free exchange of ideas and allows for up and coming producers of content to actually compete in today's market place. If you don't think net neutrality is important, you haven't been paying attention.

The world wide web currently exists as the world's only form of free communication for the unrestricted sharing of ideas. Allowing a for-profit agency to determine which websites or domains are "acceptable" is a strict form of censorship, which will lead to violations of the 1st amendment as ideas will be unable to be shared freely by citizens of all income levels, discriminating against the lower class. If humanity is to progress, the world and every individual in it must have the right to information and communication with the rest of humanity.

Freedom of speech is so important, this is like limiting letter usage or censoring the newspaper. The internet is a form of communication, don't let the 1% take this away from us too.
—Kyle, Chapel Hill, NC

The Internet cannot be run like television packages. It is hard enough with schools going toward more technology for low income families, but the end of net neutrality will make it even harder as schools and libraries will be paying more money and then more students will be failing as they cannot complete the work. Way to go government.
—Lillie Zech, Jacksonville, AL

As someone studying to be a teacher, I find that the internet will be the best resource for educators and those being educated. With the end of net neutrality, this stifles an already waning curiosity that I have seen in many students. I urge you for the sake of learning to restore net neutrality.
—Marley McDonough, Greenville, SC

Already struggling economy why don't we put more strain on people?
—Evie, ,

The internet is an education service, as much as a public library or public schools. Every blow to the internet is a blow to the citizens you serve.
—Jenny, Saint Paul, MN

Net Neutrality is something that will only cause more problems especially for the younger generations as technology and the internet is needed more and more. If you force people to pay for fast websites, this can cause students whose parents cannot pay to get information slower than other students and then if they have, say, a homework assignment that involves the net and about two hours worth of homework each for other subjectsthen if they can't get the info for their homework fast enough then they might then not get to bed early enough or get all their work done and then they won't have the same amount of sleep as other students, and then that will affect their work in school. This will cause chain reactions in others lives, and I know because I can already see how this will effect mine.

The gap between the rich and poor will just grow wider and people who make a living off of the internet will lose viewers because poor and rich people use the internet and let's be honest, most of America is frugal so who would be willing to pay for access to single sites? And then big companies like Verizon get all of the money. The internet is an INCREDIBLE resource for students, and we can learn just about anything. If that's taken away from us, our grades as a country would get even worse.
—Kimberly Davis, Worcester, MA

This is outrageous and unfair.

—Nicole Fiorey, Budd Lake, NJ

What will classes have without net neutrality?!
—Brendan, San Antonio, TX

Without Net Neutrality, most people in the US won't be able to afford basic services and access to information. So unless we want to be seen, as a country, as a place that really hates the disadvantaged, I suggest you bring Net Neutrality back.
—Christina Pilz, ,

If Verizon does do this, it is essentially cyberterrorism and petty larceny. The FCC exists to prevent this.

—Jourdan McCarthy, Round Rock, TX

Please restore net neutrality. It is very important to everyone.
—Kayla Baker, Grovetown, GA

If ISPs block access to the internet - purely because of greed, I might add - they're going to lose a LOT of paying customers, myself included. There are going to be a TON of pissed off consumers if they actually do that. That's like someone slapping you in the face, and you asking, "Please, Sir, may I have another?" I would recommend that these money-hungry bastards take some of their vast wealth and buy themselves a clue.
—Amanda Gefner, Coram, NY

This is so very important for every person to have a voice and not be silenced.
—Sarah Hamilton, Houma, LA

Limiting the 'unlimited resource' WILL result in people rioting all over the US. Period. If you really want to risk doing that (and remember how well SOPA was handled) Then don't EVER touch the internet or try to make changes to something that is already perfect. The only reason someone would try to limit the internet is to limit the data that so far has been getting companies, celebrities, and the government in trouble. We are well aware of all that would occur if any company tried to limit the largest resource in the world. And spies/governments will find ways around this 'tiny barrier' so the only people you hurt with this action are the people who already are paying an incredible amount to use it. Don't even try to squeeze any more money out of the internet industry as it will always cause massive backlash. You want more money? Make a incredibly fast connection speed for a price you greedy corporations are comfortable with, that is the only way. Sincerely, a techie of the early 90's
—Erik Carlson, Winter Park, FL

Don't allow personal agendas to close or even impede access to the internet!
—Ashley Vega, Fontana, CA

Free information flow is beyond price. Do not allow the internet as we know it to become even more monetized. We the people already have so little faith and trust in those who are situated in position of power within our country. Do not betray us. Restore, protect and enforce Net Neutrality. A government that doesn't serve the interests of the people has no reason to exist. Defend us.
—Tyjer Liam Averay, Fort Bragg, NC

The Internet should be a free and equal place. Allowing companies to take control of the Internet is horrible and will only destroy the one thing that connects the entire world so beautifully. I don't ind paying for internet service but the Internet should come as a whole, not in bits that a company can decide what to offer and what I have to pay for. Are you insane? Why would you get rid of net neutrality, at all, ever. Restore it, before every government, country, and business on the planet is absolutely destroyed by this. Does no one in charge realize that without this, it would mean the loss of billions of dollars?
—Alexandra Wilson, Palmer Lake, CO

No seriously, this isn't funny anymore. I've signed far too many petitions against this. The freedom of the internet and information is the best stepping stone towards a better tomorrow that humanity has ever had. Trying to control it for a quick buck, rather than actually appropriately taxing these companies, will only create more problems and more stress on the American public. Ask any historian or analyst and they will say that America is clearly teetering on revolt. Miraculously, it is the internet that has kept the general public complacent and peaceful. If that state is what you desire, you don’t need to do anything and keep the internet free. Otherwise, if you attempt to control the freedom of media and information, this generation will be outraged. We are already too well informed and there is no going back to lies and secrecy. If you are not open with us, we simply will not trust you. I, for one, would like to see the transition into a brighter future to be a peaceful and stable one. Where information stays free and people are allowed to live their lives as they see fit. As it stands, I do not see this transition happening without a police state being formed and innocent blood being shed. The internet is the catalyst for either of these two events. Remember, You’re a representative, not a lobbyist. Listen to the people and keep net neutrality.

The internet has always been free and enjoyable. To issue such a massive change goes against the very nature of the internet itself. As a low income entry level employee working 2 jobs to support myself. This is a massive blow to my daily life, and to many of the others I know on the web. This is a horrible decision that has no benefits to those outside the ISP companies. It is what I honestly believe to be the worst decision I have ever seen, going directly against the American dream itself.

the internet should be kept free-to-use! if we have to pay someone just to visit a website, we might as well unplug our pcs. :/
—Megan Hughes, ,

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and it needs to remain.

It's segrigation using the internet. If you let people that can throw extra money at their internet provider while slowing down the ones that don't have that luxury you're proving that we're not equal. Everyone is equal no matter their race, religion, economical standing, gender, or sexuality. So who gives companies the right to say otherwise because they want to make extra money? They should be ashamed of themselves and this should be stopped.

Dear FCC, This is not the first time that bills advocating for the death of net-neutrality have been proposed. However, in all cases prior to this one, they have been struck down and the people have declared that they want no bills even remotely similar to those to pass. In allowing this, you have openly defied to people and betrayed their trust in Government. However, this trust can easily be restored by passing further protections for the people (please take care to note here that the ISP companies do NOT constitute the people in this case, but rather a very small minority that seek only personal gain at the detriment of everyone else). Ultimately, the best option would be to reverse this decision somehow and continue to reject all other similar proposals that are sure to follow such an action. It is your job to protect the freedom and the rights of the people from all who seek to undermine them, including private companies. It is not your job to give in to the company's bribery and extortion. Do your job.

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Samantha Gray, Genoa City, WI

No American here would want our ISP's to restrict what we do because they can and want more money for the same data.
—Wyatt Alderman, Jefferson City, MO

This is a gross miscarriage of justice. The government exists to represent its people, not its corporations. The people do not want this. No one wants this to happen but large corporations, which, if you take roll call, account for a tiny, tiny percentage of the actual population of this country. Please bear this in mind when taking action against the wishes of your people. Also, if, whoever you are, you find yourself not having to pay extra to use Google, do go ahead and Google what has happened when governments such as those of the Arab Spring tampered with the internet use of their citizens. It is a human right and a treasure trove of information and economic benefit. Do not deny the people this right. It will not work in the favor of anyone but a select few.

Net neutrality is so important in this age of information! By getting rid of net neutrality, you are taking away this vital communications service from people who need it most: people with a low socioeconomic status who need the benefit of access free information. Freedom to information is a public right. The world wide web should be a public utility, not a premium. You don't pay extra to get each particular drop of water at the tap. KEEP THE INTERNET FREE.
—Cheyenne Lee, Duncansville, PA

The internet has become a great tool for sharing thoughts, ideas, and news throughout the world. it breaks down the barriers created by distance to connect us instantly with humans around the world. Why on earth would we want to stifle this advancement in communication by allowing the rich (ie companies) to have control over what is shared, what is seen, or even to an extent what is thought? This will quickly become a scenario of the wealthy being able to have more information at their disposal than those unfortunate enough to be in a lower class. It will further divide the separation of the classes, and divide us as a nation. Please please please, take the human rights issue into consideration, humans have the right to access any information they require, regardless of class or status. stand on the right side of history, leave the internet as it is.
—Scott Lindborg, Rapid City, SD

We the people deserve the right to make money through internet businesses. Major corporations that are already wealthy should not be given special treatment at the cost of small businesses operated by everyday people. This is economic tyranny. The rich and powerful corporations won't be happy until we are all slaves working for their companies. This court decision to end net neutrality is helping to destroy the free market economic system on which our American society was based.

Many self-employed individuals rely on the internet as their sole source of income. This new change could stifle people's literal life-line and only source of income which would make it harder to feed their families, feed themselves and save for their future. It makes it harder for others to access their services, which will also be a detriment to their small business. I'm very sick of huge corporations screwing over small business and individuals. Sacrificing the public's ability to communicate with each other and navigate the web without having to deal with selective access to various places to boost profits of gigantic corporations that already take advantage of us should be a crime.

—Kyle perry, Fremont, CA

This is disgusting and an assault on the freedoms this country allegedly holds dear. How dare you try and take openly accessible information and data from those who seek it and need it.
—Julie Fooshee, Ipswich, MA

Freedom cannot exist without free and equal access to information. Allowing for the possibility of hierarchical or tiered bandwidth speeds will only lead to unequal access. Allowing CORPORATIONS to decide what information is accessible or easily accessible to the PEOPLE directly violates the principles upon which our country was founded. The internet belongs to the PEOPLE just like our alleged democracy is supposed to belong to the PEOPLE. Corporations MUST NOT be allowed to make decisions for the people.
—Jae Johns, Jamaica Plain, MA

Without net neutrality, companies will be able to require an upcharge to enable good loading speeds on any website they choose. My internet provider can now slow down my download rate, limiting what websites I can use unless I pay them more money. This is an outrage and a horrible business model. It is the opposite of what the internet is about, equal access to information.
—Laura Hacke, Saint Louis, MO

Destroying net neutrality destroys the very essence of what makes this country great (or what should). The internet is often a forum for the spread of ideas and to limit that limits our freedom as Americans. It will hurt college students like me. It will hurt small businesses. It will hurt everyone who isn't a corporation. This nation was not made so that corporations would take it over.

As a college student, there are many websites that I need to maintain access to in order to do my work for the various classes I take, and I'm terrified that the end of Net Neutrality could mean that I have to pay even more than I am already required to do in order to continue accessing sites like McGraw Hill Connect or other sites that I am required to have membership with in order to complete work for my classes. I am also extremely concerned and angry about the possibility that, as a frequent internet user and a friend of many web-based artists, people could be blocked by their ISPs from accessing websites that they use for both recreation and business. Net Neutrality is incredibly important and there is little I would like more than to see it restored.

The internet doesn't belong to anyone, it belongs to everyone. Of course you have to pay to use certain services like portfolio hosting, or stock photo downloading, but that is the specific right of that company. Paying package tiers just to be able to SEE the site in the first place, beyond paying for basic access, is ridiculous.
—Mathew Kerwin, New York, NY

The internet is too important of a resource to be put in the hands of greedy companies
—Sarah Wood, Holland, MI

This is not okay. Choosing which sites load faster because of the service providers choice is most definitely not a fair thing for any service to do. In the fact being that not all customers will visit those sites but the ones that do will be penalized with slow speeds for absolutely ridiculous and biased reasons! This needs to go and we need net neutrality.
—Blake, Mooresville, IN

Keep the internet EQUAL.
—Kate, Germantown, TN

No.
—Tonya, Fairfax, VA

The internet was intended to, and always should be, a way to share information and create social bonds freely. I stopped watching television because it had too many commercials and it was always easier to watch things on netflix and not deal with unwanted advertisement. And here they are, not only trying to get commercials on the internet, but having to PAY to get on certain sites? It's unfair.
—Amber Davis, Solon, OH

Don't you dare, I refuse to pay to get into a website damn you

Stop ruining everything you godawful morons —Danielle Verhey, Fargo, ND

DON'T TRAMPLE MY RIGHTS
—Mellissa Owens, Las Vegas, NV

You people are dumb as shit
—Lucas Benevides, Stoneham, MA

The internet is a uniquely invaluable common space and should remain equally accessible to everyone with internet access! Please don't let our most economically and socially influential environment fall apart.
—Kaydee Hankes, Clarksville, TN

Why must you try to market everything to the people of your nation, and make one more bill for us to pay to you.
—Connor Billies, Scottsville, VA

If Net Neutrality dies, so does my source of income. Fuck that.
—Clyde Patrick, Bowie, MD

You, the FCC, are unelected as the judges who overrule you. Show us that you are better than judiciary, the oligarchs who rule our lives, by rewriting whatever regulations this ruling destroyed. Or you could visit Russia and ask the locals how they enjoy living in a country where billionaires pull the strings of a government that crushes dissent. They have oil, we have ideas. Stop the flow of those ideas, and the United States has nothing to sell the world but inedible corn starch and soybeans.
—Joshua Graciano, Concord, NH

The internet is not a service that companies can exploit for profit. It is a vital communications network that should be available to everyone and should not be a means for companies to rob the citizens
—Jose, Livingston, CA

I think the internet should stay free the government is already spying on anyone with an online account so us having to pay tax on the only type of free entertainment we have left

—Garrett Glynn, Saint Charles, MI

Even if there are good intentions behind it initially, without boundaries and guidelines to protect the people who have done nothing to deserve this, the consequences can be dire and cause a world in which freedom is an illusion.
—Melissa DiMeglio, Lake Orion, MI

The internet isn't supposed to be like this. This is an incredibly stupid idea and the internet needs to stay how it is. The internet has so many resources for people who need help, and who knows, this may cause many people to actually die. This is literally a dangerous thing to do.
—Brenna, Offutt A F B, NE

My mother is a small business owner that deals exclusively in internet transactions. Ending net neutrality could literally take food out of my siblings' mouths. I'm also taking college courses online, and the cost of tuition and books will only be compounded by increased bandwidth costs for and from the school.
—Margaret Wood, Dallas, TX

It's not right and it doesn't make sense: The internet is in every aspect of our lives now, whether we realize it or not. It's become as universal as the telephone or electricity! The idea that Internet Service Providers should not classified as common carriers is ludicrous!
—Samuel Armbruster, simpsonville, SC

this is ridiculous! I already pay for tons of useless channels on TV just to get the few I do actually want and it's a pain. please don't do this to the Internet.

If you even remotely believe in America having equal opportunity and justice, you will see to it that not only is net neutrality restored, but also PROTECTED.
—Leon L. Gerlette, Carlisle, PA

This country is literally run by idiots.
—Vic T, Chattanooga, TN

The idea that the internet too will be limited by what socio-economics allow is a dangerous one, potentially destroying peoples abilities to better their lives, gain information and connect with other people. To do so is to silence the voice and limit free speech and free information, as well as potentially destroy people's abilities to make money or reach a market. Restore Net Neutrality rules!
—Taeghan BUggy, ,

Any authority, once given, is impossible to reign back in. Allowing ISPs to determine who receives fast-lane access directly undermines the neutrality of the internet. Allowing massive companies to choose what information is most readily available directly hinders the education, and rational judgement of the American people.
—Lee Perry, Chattanooga, TN

Please restore Net Neutrality. The internet is an important bridge between people all over the world, of all races and classes, and for many individuals and small businesses. Taking away Net Neutrality in favor of a few huge corporations will cripple this communication and progression towards a more unified society. Please restore Net Neutrality.
—Marilyn Cruickshank, Marina, CA

Net Neutrality is essential, i have the same right to the internet (that i am already paying for) as someone who si very wealthy or very poor.
—Lauren Barnes, Tustin, CA

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

—Luke Vennall, ,

This is abuse of your power.
—Melanie Lyons, Rockville, MD

Limiting net neutrality limits the freedoms of Americans and people around the world. Free and equal access to the internet impacts almost everyone in America, and the fact that a former FCC lobbyist is now the chairmen of the FCC helping to make these decisions should be and is a red flag. Literally no one in America who isn't bourgeoisie wants this. You're supposed to act in the interests of the people, not in the interests of corporate enterprise. If none of the people want this, why is this even a thing?
—Jace Gregory, Centerton, AR

Allowing ISP's to pick and choose which websites come with a "Basic" package is unjust. The internet is a community full of people who cant always afford to pay for internet as it is now. By allowing ISP's to do this you are stripping our freedom to use the internet and allowing ISP's to discriminate against websites to make a revenue.
—Chase Rivera, Davis, CA

How can the FCC and the Judaical branch allow this to happen? This is what start underhand deals and essentially destroying what the internet is, this is a road to extreme coperitization of the what was once the only free thing, the only undiluted, unfiltered, unsuppressed nexus of freedom of expression and the true face of human nature. Why would anyone want to destroy such a precious thing
—Sam Spyra, Spring Grove, IL

WE are the ones who make up the internet. Why should THEY get to charge us extra? We already pay like crazy to our isps!
—Meghan, Moscow Mills, MO

Please don't do this.

We already pay for internet itself, we don't have the money to be paying to access WEBSITES.
—Catrina Stephens, Fort Worth, TX

I don't see why anyone would find this to be a good idea, except as a money-making scheme in this capitalist nation. It affects everybody in a negative way, and is just a shoddy, rude idea so big companies can make more money than they already do.
—Sydney Sims, Dallas, GA

No
—Aubrey, Ormond Beach, FL

This is idiotic. If I have to pay extra just to use the internet at not a snail's pace and I have to pay for access to websites I simply won't use the internet. I can live without google if this is what's happening.

—Rebecca Faron, Frankfort, IL

Seriously y'all need to restore net neutrality. This is some mad scientist evil villain shit y'all are dabbling in and you need to reclassify broadband internet service as a friggin telecommunications service like now. We're supposed to be a democracy but this is clearly an oligarchy and just fix the internet already please —Natalie Heath, Kennesaw, GA

why is this even being considered? its the dumbest fucking thing ive ever seen
—Emi, Seattle, WA

Just how much more control do you want to put in our corportations? Television was a cultural phenomenon that brought us together as a nation: presidential elections, the first televised sports programs, the moon landing, but then the corporations put a price on that and blasted in advertisments which depersonalized the CULTURAL connection. When the internet came out, we turned to this as a society to assimilate, speak, learn, interact, and COMMUNE. There comes a time when people need a step back from this fucked up system of capitalism and that is getting harder and harder with every COURT (not Sovereign) decision which just puts more money in the pocket of the 3%. Use a little foresight if you can even see out of your own ass which your head has been shoved up and be smart and stop fucking up this country for the coming generations.

I'm a Canadian, and I like to access websites from both Canada AND America. If this continues on its set path, chances are I will never be able to access some of the smaller sites I like to visit. Also, I'll most likely never be able to become a web designer, as it would cost FAR TOO MUCH to get my website hosted with decent access rates.
—Elizabeth Jones, ,

please
—Xuan, Houston, TX

Despite what may have been good intentions, this act will not create any kind of internet 'fast lane'. It will make it too expensive for smaller sites to run. It will encourage discrimination. Net neutrality is important for the people you should actually be supporting; you know, the average civilian? Not corporations?
—Gibson, ,

Why would you do this? You are killing the internet - a tool and resource - for your children. For your children's children. Are you willing to accommodate a CORPORATION over your own children and lineage? ISP's already make money hand-over-fist and you're only helping that! You have basically told the population that you favor big box companies over the individual American AND you're making sure the wealth is unevenly distributed by putting more power in the hands of those who can now make more money off it! If you want to fix the infrastructure problem, set laws in place that force the ISP's to compete with each other and drive progress forward. They section out areas that Comcast has access to that Time Warner and AT-T stay away from and vise-versa. Stop worrying so much about the big box companies and start focusing more on the little guy who will be forced to deal with the shit end of the stick.
—Stephen Brown, Cincinnati, OH

Don't make living harder for those who can barely afford things as is.
—Jessica Crapser, Dekalb, IL

Please bring back net neutrality
—Mackenzie Lofrese, Thiells, NY

This doesn't just effect the US and that's kinda unfair.
—Ryan Moore, Union City, CA

We deserve our anonymity. You, the guy reading this? I know you do something on the internet that you don't want the powers that be to know about.
—Isaac Clarke Rader, Intervale, NH

You're just letting big companies like Comcast fuck the common consumer even harder now. Thanks for nothing FCC.

—Katarina Drew, Redwood Valley, CA

Fuck whoever did this. All it's going to do is suck money from people that can't afford it and line the pockets of internet service providers, as if they already aren't getting fat enough wages.
—Bob Farted, Marina, CA

NO COMMERCIALS!
—Alex, ,

I am a poor person and this law effects me personally because the internet is a big deal in my otherwise quite depressing life. The potential downfalls from this being struck down and nothing replacing it could keep me not only from work issues, but further keep me from being able to enjoy anything and keep me productive. In addition, the loss of net neutrality will have far reaching effects on people rich AND poor that must be looked into and stopped. Please keep Net Neutrality! Keep the internet free, in a philosophical sense!

—Hannah, Elkhorn, NE

It seems to me that the ISPs will be limiting the freedom of speech of website owners.
—David Archambault, Oconto, NE

The internet is supposed to be a place for people to easily access information. A lot of families don't have enough money to pay for stuff like this and it will hurt their kids' education and everyone's access to free info. Plenty of websites already make you pay for memberships, to spread this throughout the World Wide Web is just a dumb way to make money and enforce standards that people suffer because of. It's just not a good thing.
—Nim Rhodes, Pittsburgh, PA

Net neutrality is one of the fundamental forces guiding human beings towards innovation and discovery. Taking it away is both classist and idiotic.
—Madeline, Bloomington, IN

This cannot happen. A free and open internet helps unite this nation, as it has provided a platform of equality from which the poor and the rich man can speak. Without this platform, oppression against marginalized groups will arise without anyone to protect them.

—Chris Roque, Staten Island, NY

As a the owner of a small web development business and as a web application developer, the very thought of ISPs controlling who gets what speeds is terrifying. This could easily lead to ISPs charging big companies - like Netflix or Google - in order to give them higher speeds, which would mean a decrease in allocated resources to small websites like the ones I create. This is a complete blow to start-ups, any non-giant tech company, and consumers as a whole.
—Edwin Gomez, Lehigh Acres, FL

cmon really
—Belle, Shreveport, LA

We're not free anymore.
—Shane Salisbury, Lexington, KY

This is insane. You cannot tell people to pay to browse the websites they already do. You cannot kill net neutrality for it could only lead to worse things. People who are disabled or have severe anxiety may not be able to get to the resources they NEED or safe community spaces for them to relate to people in. It will aid the spread of racism, classism, sexism, ableism and so much more. How dare you take away the right of people everywhere to FREELY spend their time as they choose? How dare you tell people what they can and cannot do with their time and actions? This is unjust.
—Cheyenne Boveington, Cape Coral, FL

I pay for access to the internet, not part of the internet. I do not appreciate this censorship of information.
—Lauren Prewitt, Wilmerding, PA

—Steele, Severna Park, MD

please don't follow the money for once and restore net neutrailty
—Bri Crockett, Kingwood, TX

Limiting the public's access to the internet by making the public have to pay for what sites they visit is sickening and greedy. My family cannot afford television any more, not in the last couple of years, not since my father was laid off due to the economic downfall that caused millions of job losses. The internet is how my family gets our news, how we look for jobs, stay in touch, keep informed. Those who are opposed to Net Neutrality seem to want to keep people like my family, and the countless others who wouldn't be able to afford the necessity that is the internet, in the dark and ignorant about the world around them. I can only hope that the Dystopian nightmare of a novel that is 1984 (by George Orwell, in case you weren't aware) did not predict the rise of Big Brother, as this issue, and many others, indicate.
—Emily, Clarkesville, GA

Please no. WE pay enough, we're becoming broke, we need the internet free.
—Rennlei, Philadelphia, PA

The Internet is meant to be viewed by all, so why make us pay for things that would ruin small businesses who need the vast reach of searches to make it in the world.

Seriously, getting rid of net neutrality will cripple the freelance art industry. Not to mention it will cripple lower income families' access to education, resources, help, and entertainment. I can't believe we even have to argue about this. The internet isn't OWNED by anyone.
—Allison Turner, New York, NY

To take away Net Neutrality is to take away the heart of the net. To take it away, to take the life of the internet away, would mean, no joke, the world would be set back MANY years.
—Blake Benton, Colorado Springs, CO

I'm a poor student, I can barely afford internet as it is. IF I have to pay for specific sites, I'll never be able to push forward in the world. The internet is limitless. It's our new frontier. Why give it limits?
—Elizabeth McNelly, Sarasota, FL

Ridiculous, the reason we are on the internet is because TV is terrible. Stop.
—Kris college, Tampa, FL

I shouldn't even have to explain why this is important. FCC needs to cut the crap and take care of this ASAP.
—Erica Katherine Avery, Bay City, MI

Verizon's already rich why do they need more money? I'm a broke student who needs access to the internet which I'm already paying for without extra charges.
—Aylyn Bautista, Garland, TX

That would majorly disrupt businesses and online market, wouldn't it? Seems illogical to me.
—Audrey, Columbia, MO

NOPE BITCH NKT HAPPENKNG I AKNT LAYING FOR INTERNET THIS IS MY LIFE I WILL SKIN YOU IF THIS HAPPENS

It's unfair for you to try and take away our internet freedom
—Adam Seitz, Trenton, NJ

Internet should be for the people, not the providers!
—Billy, Portland, OR

Why would anyone say that Net Neutrality is bad? With this you'll pretty much have to pay a subscription fee to see your family's Christmas photos on Facebook. Oh you want to see Grandma enjoy her sweater you mailed her? Nope, gotta pay. This is terrible and I hope the court is ashamed.
—Rebecca Lawson, Whitestown, IN

The end of Net Neutrality is the end of the Internet, full stop. Allowing capitalism to overtake content is going to ruin valuable ways we communicate, share content, and build awareness all over the world, and for what?
—Bella Suarez, Baltimore, MD

Restore net neutrality.
—Angelica Conde, Los Angeles, CA

The corruption in our government is sickening. Every human being has the right to the internet and the wealth of knowledge that comes with it. In our day and age, this is a human resource. Anyone can educate themselves on any topic, and that's a beautiful thing. I refuse to allow that to change just because some high-up greedy rich people want more money.
—Laura Nolan, Mobile, AL

Net Neutrality is essential. Please don't kill the spirit of the Internet.
—Joseph Mountz, Lansdale, PA

If I wanted to see something like tv I would have watched tv
—Adin Alem, Lees Summit, MO

The concept of commercializing the one thing that allows the whole world to communicate freely and has advanced us to an astounding degree is absolutely ridiculous.

Start treating broadband like a communications service, and restore its Net Neutrality rules.
—E Bee, Philadelphia, PA

Bring back the net!!
—Bethany Word, Taylors, SC

We are not about to let massive companies (who already charge us ridiculously large sums of money) charge us even more simply because they think they can get away with it. We will not be exploited by already rich companies for even more money. We will not be charged even more for a service that has become a vital part of society and every day life.

—Tara, Cedar City, UT

Restore Net Neutrality. We don't need companies ruling every aspect of our lives!
—Parr Stover, Burlington, WA

NO MORE MEDIA CONTROL.
—Julian Ramon Figueroa, Los Angeles, CA

What group of idiots decide to shut down Net Neutrality? Seriously, half of us live on the internet, and with networks able to block what websites we go to, and slow everything down, what'll be left for the people working online? How about the YouTubers who make all their money off of videos? My dad works with Dick's Sporting Goods and makes/edits their websites. People like him might lose their jobs because of this crap. Social sites would shut down, like Twitter or Facebook, because no one would be able to log on, or they'd just be too slow to handle. We'd lose the internet basically. Heck no. Get Net Neutrality back up you piles of garbage.
—Dylan Kelly, ,

We've taken away a legally unsound law away, making way for legally unsound corporate decisions. Neutering net neutrality is like allowing paper mills to charge extra to people who want to print Bibles instead of newspapers, or vice-versa.

—Kristen, Danbury, CT

THIS IS NOT ACCEPTABLE. For the country that beats the world over the head with freedom, you seem to think that such freedom is allowed to come at a price tag only some can afford.
—Amber T Reid, ,

Many school and systems are moving onto online platforms for school work in order to conserve paper. If the bill is enacted, many students will not be able to do work and continue to function as a student. I am respectfully requesting you to not kill Net Neutrality so that students may continue their education in peace and without entire upheavals and restructuring.
—Amy Dong, Chapel Hill, NC

the frick u guys like no stop it
—Kalyn May, Houston, TX

I have a several friends who are artists and do much of their business and networking via the internet. If websites that are geared towards getting their artwork out for others to see and making future connections that could help their career down the road is impeded because of the death of Net Neutrality, then the only thing that's going to happen is that their lives are going to be harder and there's going to be one more person potentially applying for unemployment. Restore Net Neutrality. Protect young and freelance artists. If you don't do this, or ignore this, then YOU are part of the reason the American Dream is dead.
—Victoria Dake, Andover, CT

we all know that theres a fair chance that this will be used for bad things, like slowing down websites that are known to be pro-gay, or religious websites other than Christians, or to target political sites, republican, democrat, libertarian, so if your political, religious, or just want freedom for all, you should fight this.

—Tasha Young, Clinton, OK

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

—Nupur Maheshwari, Fairfield, IA

I work at a library and it is truly scary how the destruction of net neutrality will affect everyone - with or without computers. If we become unable to provide access to the Internet due to price increases than we greatly limit our services and the affect that libraries have in communities.
—Jenna M. Harmison, Urbana, OH

This is pure capitalism taking away the freedom of the people.

In the economy here; cash is already strapped as it is. You bet your ass companies would suck the ever living life out of misc. art sites. I don’t want it to ever come down to me choosing between groceries or purchasing a new tier package via comcast to be able to access tumblr or DeviantArt (let alone not guaranteeing I’ll even be seen by my customer base since they may not want to pay out their asses either). It doesn’t seem important to most, but I do 90% of my business online entirely.

The internet is an important resource that provides a voice to those around the world who, otherwise, would not have one.
—Emilee Tovani, Butte, MT

Please don't do this. We use the Internet for other ways besides games and leisures. We use the Internet for work purposes, so we can get money and pay for bills. Stripping away our Internet can equal stripping away good paying jobs for people.
—Queenie, Philadelphia, PA

I am not paying money to use sites. I already pay enough money as is to use the internet.
—Wendy, Palm Coast, FL

The internet is at its best when it is an open resource - treat broadband like a communications service and restore net neutrality rules!
—Jennifer Eltringham, Colorado Springs, CO

PLEASE reinstate net neutrality. This ruling negatively effects everyone -- socially and economically.
—Caitlin Monroe, Mesa, AZ

—Michiko Kaitlin McMahon, Katy, TX

I like the internet. Keep it free please —Michael Lewis, Claremont, CA

The internet is not like a TV station. An entire world of community has been created based off the fact that ANYONE can access it given the right equipment. It is important to realize broadband as a communications service and not a cable package.
—Krysta Scripter, Carson City, NV

no jeez whats wrong with you why the heck would you do that ah
—, Whitefish, MT

The internet is for everyone
—Chris Thompson, Houston, TX

They already charge stupid amounts of money for internet access in the first place (based on speeds that aren't abysmal). Many sites also already have a pay option for better or premium access. By doing this, you are tearing down any potential for small businesses to be able to afford to use anything internet-related. You're going to kill the internet entirely; most people who use the internet aren't going to have the extra money to pay in addition to what they already use. I use the internet primary to get my news, talk to family, and other services that I cannot afford to pay for separately. I also use it as a secondary source of income, as both a novelist and an artist. It is literally my lifeline to my client base. I'm really sick of big business being given rights to essentially monopolize their specific area of consumer business. Didn't we rule against monopolies before? Weren't they illegal before? Why are you guys suddenly supporting that now? Why is it suddenly okay to take away people's rights to what many would deem a major source of income? Why would you hurt small businesses by cutting them out of something that they can barely afford now? What is wrong with you, Congress? I think it's time that our elected officials realized that they are not there for big business. They are there for the people, and right now, the people are seriously angry with them.
—Amanda Link, Apex, NC

This is an outrage. No one should have the right to do such a thing!
—Hung Yoo, Centreville, VA

FCC, kindly go step on a million legos. Then, realize that this will be the next Citizens United and the U.S. will actually hate your living guts. We will get lobbyists. Just you wait. Snarling, hungry, attack lobbyists.
—Jamie Swinnerton, Denver, CO

It is disgusting that net neutrality rules were destroyed. No one should have to pay more for internet traffic, especially when small companies and individuals such as freelance artists could not afford to pay for more.
—Ashley DiFabrizio, Raleigh, NC

I would really like for the government NOT to reduce my rights any further, especially when it comes to the internet. I don't want corporations ruling me.
—Katherine, Burnsville, MN

—Ailish Ryan, ,

We already pay enough to access basic health and higher level knowledge. Don't fuck this up too.
—Julia A Genovesi, Columbus, OH

This is appalling, there is no excuse for this attempt to privatize the internet. Net Neutrality is essential and must be upheld. I demand this ridiculous grab at money is abolished.
—Casey Chapman, Bullhead City, AZ

Why are we trying to copy communist countries like China?
—Thomas Dimmick, ,

this is ridiculous I NEED the internet to be free. this is one thing you can't take from us. please.
—Allie, Grand Blanc, MI

We already pay for the internet. We already pay for EVERYTHING. Everyone is becoming poorer. Just stop.
—Lilah Guerra, Camarillo, CA

This will kill the ability for small name people on the internet to make a name for themselves without having to go to highly cluttered sites like YouTube or Tumblr. Please take the internet back to how it was, a neutral ground where we are all equally able to be someone or something.
—Kyle Stover, Brooklyn, NY

It's hard enough for me to afford my internet even now, if I had to pay more, then I would not be able to access the internet at all.
—Jennifer Wilson, San Angelo, TX

This ruling is absolutely ridiculous and is not am okay move it be made. The amount of small personally run businesses that would be destroyed is uncountable. Whatever happened to the right to prosper?
—Hayden Jacobs, Saint Johns, FL

They just keep taking away freedoms for their own selfish agenda. I pay a monthly fee for internet already I should not have to pay by website.
—Kayleigh, North Branch, MI

Please Restore it. I just need it the web just as it is.
—Cam, ,

NET NEUTRALITY FTE
—Liesel Jersey, Calabasas, CA

I need the internet for my school assignments, and to just be able to hang out with my friends I cant reach offline. I don't want to have to pay more to do this!
—Maddie, Statesville, NC

Keep communication and information accessible to all.
—Sean Bazzett, ,

Please please please fix this!
—Rhianna Horner, Titusville, FL

This ought to be illegal.
—Avery, Portland, OR

The freedom and accessibility of information on the internet is one of the most grown breaking leaps in communicational or informational technology since the invention of the printing press. It means an equality of available information on a scale we have never seen before in the history of humanity. That kind of access being restrained by a financial barrier would mean death to any hope of lessening the gap between high wage earners and low income households.
—Emily Reid, Millbrook, NY

This decision will be detrimental to small business owners and private entrepreneurs and ultimately cause more harm than good. The internet is an extremely valuable tool in terms of spreading news and information, and is as much an educational tool as an entertaining one.
—Kristin Silvia, Danbury, CT

Please restore an open Internet and treat broadband like a communications service.
—J, Culver City, CA

WHY WOULD YOU DO THIS —Angelo Consuelo, Houston, TX

No this is very bad.
—Emily Vanderley, Carmel, CA

Please do not kill Net Neutrality! Internet service is already getting more and more expensive. Providers (such as Comcast and Time Warner), who are already earning billions per year, don't need to squeeze the American people for any more money than they already are, especially in an economy that is designed to keep the 1-percenters obscenely wealthy at the expense of hard working, low-income families in a job market that is tenuous at best. It's unnecessary and just plain wrong.
—Tracey Storch, Bedford, NH

Keep the plutocratic neo-fascists' hands off of our internet!
—Shian Vafaeezadeh, Snohomish, WA

It's important to keep the internet as accessible as possible to give those who are unable to pay for regular service a way to participate in the world and to learn.
—Claire Drown, Davis, CA

The fact that America, having invented the internet, is incapable of providing the level of access that is considered 'Normal' in South Korea shows the need for a neutral system.
—Mark Dodson, Mountain Top, PA

Keep the net free, for fuck's sake. What is this, China? Putting any limits on the internet is an extremely slippery slope.
—Josiah, Memphis, TN

This is bs.
—Luke, Allentown, PA

I want you to disclose how much money big telecom companies paid you to completely disregard all of those messages saying not to do this.
—Ryan Wachowiak, El Cajon, CA

Please DO NOT send me emails
—Lola, Ketchikan, AK

Restore net neutrality now!
—Liz A., Anaheim, CA

Do you have Comcast or AT&T internet or television? Then you already know how much they suck! Do you really want to give companies like that the opportunity to control the internet, too? That and Lord only knows what the public will DO if this goes through. A lot of people make their living off of online resources. I don't think people will just sit quietly while that's taken away from them...
—Allison Bartliff, Atlanta, GA

Broadband IS a communication service. It's an essential communication service. It is nearly impossible to search for jobs, housing, and other necessities without an internet connection - trust me, I know. Please reclassify it so that companies can't make it into a luxury item!

—C L., Hamden, CT

fuck this man this is fucking dystopian
—Maggie Lombard, Carlsbad, CA

This is so unfair, no way am i paying for something that should be free to browse and educate myself with. The internet is education, making us pay for this is limiting the learning potential of the United States, with free internet we will progress faster within the next year, making us pay is spelling out your own downfall.
—Sammi, Westport, MA

Really? We don't need this. We don't want this. Give net neutrality back.
—Tory, Hallsville, TX

THE INTERNET SHOULD BE A BASIC HUMAN RIGHT.
—Christine Vaughan, Minden, LA

I am not paid much. I can barely afford the internet access I already have. By paying for access to websites, I will no longer be able to use it, by the simple fact that I will no longer be able to afford it. Please restore net neutrality.
—Jennifer Pentland, Moorhead, MN

The Internet is a free place.
—Saxima Beats, Lewisville, TX

Leave the internet alone and stop trying to manipulate us.
—, Miami, FL

In a world growing with technology usage, I find it truly appalling that companies feel they have the right to limit what we can and cannot access unless we fork over more cash. The fact that companies feel they have the right and authority to do such a thing is sickening to the core.
—Nicole Donovan, Lewisville, TX

This is ridiculous. Restore net neutrality.
—Brent Eisenbarth, Summerfield, NC

Absolutely horrendous violation of what should be a human right. The right to the access of information should not be altered in a way that benefits some and not others. The internet must remain a level playing field
—Anthony Cummings, Denver, CO

This isn't right at all. The internet has a HUGE effect on the economy and it will affect EVERYONE badly!
—Krystal, Diamond Bar, CA

Nearly all citizens of America oppose this.Really the only people who don't are the CEO's of internet providers who are greedy for money.
—Travis Rainey, Decaturville, TN

—Aimee Jenkins, ,

This needs to be stopped! How such a thing can be passed is absolutely crazy.
—Sabrina Blancas, San Mateo, CA

The internet is a source of communication and information for a world that needs and thrives on both. By increasing the price of certain websites, you thereby limit those who can access them, which directly results in less information and less communication. Fix the law. Bring back Net Neutrality.

The Internet is a resource for anyone and everyone to express themselves openly and freely. You can't take away that privilege to make petty cash.
—Chris Lortie, ,

I'm already getting the short stick because I'm disabled and can't afford a great deal of things, I shouldn't lose access to internet sites because I can't afford to pay the broadband companies more than I already do. I rely on the internet as a distraction from how miserable I am due to health reasons and there are millions of people like me. Not only would this be a blow to freedom of speech but mental health as well if it is not corrected.
—Holly Wrinkle, Springfield, MO

This really shouldn't even be an issue. It's quite obvious that either a) the vast majority of the people making these decisions do not actually have any investment in the internet and/or don't really understand what it is at all, or b) do not understand that the majority of the people they should be making the decision FOR, in fact, DO have an investment in the internet, and have been exceedingly vocal about how they want it run.

—Dustin, ,

We as a nation and as a global community deserve a safe, free sphere in which to communicate.
—Clarissa Olivares, San Jose, CA

I rely heavily on the internet, not just for entertainment, but as a resource for my professional life among several other important things. Even as a college graduate, my income is limited and my debts are high, and if the cable companies are allowed to run rampant over the way they provide cable, someone like me will likely not be able to afford "fast-lane access" and will have large portions of the internet throttled and restricted, if not outright withheld from access. If cable companies need to be able to walk all over their consumers to foster technological progress in the way the deliver something as vital to modern living as the internet, rather than encourage competition by virtue of drive to provide the best service to their consumers as possible, that should be evidence enough that they have become corrupt and no longer have any regards for the people they serve. The American people and their access to all the internet has to offer should not take a backseat to the profit margins of big businesses.
—Douglas Schwall, Grand Rapids, MI

In the past, the internet has been a free resource. The access to legal websites has been a free resource. Now to restrict this resource, slowing down smaller sites and giving larger websites precedence is morally wrong, but completely against the United States political-social bases of classical republicanism and enlightened self-interest. The Net-Neutrality rules that originally existed ought to be put in place, for the "general Welfare" of "We the People."
—MacKenzie Dress, Maple Valley, WA

I need the internet to stay in touch with my husband.. please don't make it more difficult than it already can be!

Can ya just turn down your consume-and-conquer-hand-over- fist schemes just a little? It's intimidating and frankly we're just gonna find a way out of it. You have no power on us.
—, Redwood City, CA

Net Neutrality is what makes the internet a powerhouse of free speech and creativity. To take those basic freedoms away from your people, people who already pay for access anyway, is a crime. It's time the people take back what is theirs.
—Molly Brown, Cary, NC

Someone needs to stand up against these corporate heavy pushers and the government folks who are siding with them against the best interest of the citizens. Please, please do what you can to help remedy this further injury to this free country we live in. The Internet has revolutionized the way that we live and have firmly planted itself as a service that we as a society cannot do without very easily, much like other utilities. I believe that honest policy makers and honest people in positions of power can help to bring back the interests of the average civilian. Thank you so much for what you do.

This is terrible
—Kate Goodman, Manhattan Beach, CA

No. Just no. I already can't afford some of the basic things that help me with work-- a car, for example. Please don't do this. We created most of the things on the internet, and we have chosen to share them.
—Britney Zientara, Citrus Heights, CA

This is sad that we even have to do this. Greedy corporations just want more money at OUR expense. "The rich get richer and the poor? ...Well screw 'em!"
—Jake, La Crescenta, CA

Net Neutrality is very important and I don't know why people think it's okay to take it away. Give it back to us.
—Amber Cecelia, Casper, WY

That's bullshit
—Chris Mitchell, New Braunfels, TX

Restore Net Neutrality!
—Natasha Lindsey, Charlotte, NC

there will be more violence and emigrations on the US than you could ever predict if this passes.
—Red Jessica, Dallas, TX

I need to be able to access my schooling sites so that I may finish school. Don't make school any harder please
—Hannah, Olympia, WA

We need neutrality in order to have an educated forward-thinking society.
—Patrick Wiley, Eugene, OR

If the Internet is not a telecommunications service, then I don't know what is - please protect internet users! Thank you.
—Berta Martinez, Dallas, TX

Kept the net neutral.
—Erika Bienne, National City, CA

A large majority of internet users are junior high, high school, and college students. Many of these people do not have jobs, especially those in junior high. Most college students are saving every penny they can to pay off their debts. The internet has become an extremely valuable source for students and if we have to start paying for it, then the number of users will more likely than not drop by half. Also, most parents will not want to pay for their child's internet usage or their own, as everything is to expensive already.
—Kathryn Monroe, Jackson, MS

This can't happen! Internet needs to remain neutral for the good of the people. A lack of net neutrality is a road to imperialism, tyrranical state control, and massive unrest. Don't let this be!
—Lilly A Lawrence-Metzler, Albuquerque, NM

We desperately need Net Neutrality to keep in action. The idea that we have to pay these companies even more money than we already do to access information that we all love is ridiculous.
—Lyana, Miami, FL

The internet is a communications service. Do you see what we are doing with it at this very moment? COMMUNICATING.
—Maria Signorelli, Saint Paul, MN

The internet is a free safe place for sharing ideas. People connect with their dearest friends and family members online, and sometimes this is the only way they can connect, so please don't let these worldwide human connections be limited.
—Diane Bridges, Charleston, IL

Hey! Don't make it possible for providers to change the rates, depending on how many sites we view or what type of sites we access! Internet is NOT like cable TV! Why would you change this? Tom Wheeler, PLEASE correct this mistake!
—Emma Fowler, Philadelphia, PA

How many things am I supposed to be ashamed of this country for now?
—Jh, Los Angeles, CA

This FCC ruling is absurd. People who access the internet pay (PAY) for the services of the internet (INTERNET) - you should not be charged for usage + pay fees for entrance to web pages. That is ridiculous - do "they" not realize how limiting this ruling is -- all for seemingly selfish, corporate greed. Hundreds of thousands of people will be negatively affected, especially those who cannot afford to paying double fees out the wazoo. Here are a few examples: Teachers will be unable to pull out-of-class resources the way they can now with their (thousand dollar smart boards), students will be limited in the interactive study and research resources like Khan Academy or Hippocampus, and online businesses like vendors from Etsy or Craigslist will be crippled due to extreme customer base shrinkage. I genuinely hope the FCC is shot down with this ruling; as a young person I was taught that the world was trying to expand upon the individual mind - what I'm seeing here is blatantly the narrowing the minds and future of America as a nation.
—Austin Lee Ross, Hattiesburg, MS

The Internet has been a great resource for the country and the world to become united through access to information. Limiting this access limits our students, our schools, our artists, our journalists, our creators, and our absorbers. The internet at it's core is communication, not entertainment (although communication can and very well is entertaining and enlightening). Don't treat it like television and stifle that communication.
—Taylor LaPrairie, Portland, OR

This is going to cause much more negative effects than it will positive,bring back net neutrality please. The internet has always been a free place for people to find information, make purchases as well as selling items to purchase, but more importantly it is a place for people to reach out and connect with eachother. With the financial stability of american citizens as it is, it is truly a crime to abolish net neutrality.
—Tyler White, Schaumburg, IL

The Internet is quickly becoming essential for academic research, and independent learning for those without the resources to access formal universities. The Internet allows people to practice foreign languages with no speakers in their area, it allows those with rare diseases to share real life experiences with others affected by the same illness, it allows artists to promote their work, it allows armchair historians and genealogists to research from home and connect with people on the other side of the world. All of these opportunities, and more, must remain available to everyone. Cities around the world are exploring public wifi hotspots to allow greater connectivity. The Internet is important, and the possibility of such diverse communication and learning--without excessive limitation from ISP providers--is essential.
—Ashley Fallon, Canton, MI

For a country that preaches freedom of speech and free press, this is a low blow. If this government thinks limiting our rights bit by bit won't end horribly, they're wrong.
—Valeriya, Fair Oaks, CA

Net neutrality is good for the economy and good for our country.
—Shelby R, San Jose, CA

No.
—Monica R., Arlington, WA

This is disgusting.
—Ray, New York, NY

Keep information free!
—Frank Gawryla, Knoxville, TN

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY.
—Dillon Guziejka, Steger, IL

Please do not ruin this for us. Net Neutrality is what essentially makes the internet flourish. No more school essays, online gaming, social media, none of it.
—JustPure1, Crown Point, IN stop being such terrible people like really do something better with your power than capitalize the internet —Lauren, ,

The internet should be a free and open information resource. There is NO REASON private entities should be allowed to limit access and charge premiums to have the speeds and convenience we already enjoy.
—Sarah Jeter, Coralville, IA

This is vile and will crush almost every small online buissness owner's customer base . If the government is really trying to create more jobs the Internet needs to stay unlimited to provide those oppertinities.
—Deanna Davis, Culpeper, VA

You dildos
—Jocelyn Teixeira, Lincoln, RI

Take away net neutrality and I'm leaving America
—Man, Avon, OH

Dont be an ass. If they stop us from using the net as we please they will be assholes. So like dont do that, Dont be an asshole.
—Deniqua Doomes, College Station, TX

some of my best friends live in america and our only way of contact as of now is online ;n; i really cant lose them pls dont take away net neutrality —Luma, ,

please, give it back
—Claire Patz, Green Bay, WI

I can't believe I have to sign this petition
—Bellacrystal Cortez, Orlando, FL

the internet is an important resource and we already have to overpay for internet service in the first place. Net neutrality guarantees that everyone has access to the news and job resources that they need.
—Savannah, Mobile, AL suck my ass fcc

—Pegasus Haziqah, ,

Not everything is about money, FCC. Don't let them change the internet this way.
—Alexandra Whittaker, ,

what the actual shit is wrong with you people
—Michelle, Sterling Heights, MI

VIVA LA NET NEUTRALITY!!!!
—Chelsea Carpenito, El Cajon, CA

Why is this still a thing that's happening? You would think after SOPA, ACTA and all that other bullcrap they'd give the internet a break.
—Chris Casey, Seekonk, MA

This is insane!!!
—Sara Lane, Springfield, IL

The absence of net neutrality will ruin lives and businesses not only in America, but around the world. Also, America is not the only place in the planet that uses internet, and the absence of Net Neutrality would negatively impact the lives of other people across the globe indefinitely.
—Zack Goheen, Frederick, MD

This is not the way to a better future for humanity. ISPs should provide equal access to everyone using their services, access to the internet means access to information, and when you limit access it is unethical and disgusts me.
—Alisea Zenk, ,

I am angry about this. I earn money through net neutrality by using certain websites and cannot afford to buy access to websites. I have a hard enough time buying groceries.
—Jordan Raine Sullivan, Reno, NV

Information should be treated as a service, not as a commodity.
—Amanda Linstead, Kirkland, WA

This is going to destroy the artistic community or any small businesses that makes a live on the internet.
—David Pender, Atlanta, GA

We pay enough for internet usage, we don't need to be billed for extra sites.
—Heather McCoy, Fortville, IN

Why would anyone do something like this?! The internet for most part is a non paying thing! Does the laptop or computer look or work like a fucking?! Yeah that's what I thought. The internet is meant to differntcthan flipping the channels, that's the way it needs to stay
—Leisel Havoc, ,

This is absolutely disgusting. This is class discrimination. Limitation of information based on money. Sickening.
—David, Dade City, FL

If people think i'm going to pay more money for websites that I use more frequently,then these people are more fucking stupid than I thought.
—Alfonso Arellano, Sunland Park, NM

If my ISP starts to do the stuff they're warning could happen here, I will up and leave this country with no hesitation. Besides ruining the largest, most accessible library of knowledge in the world, without net neutrality, my livelihood becomes at risk. It would literally no longer be economically feasible to stay in this country without net neutrality.
—Samuel R. Burghoffer, Saint Augustine, FL

Please, exercise great care with this decision. Net Neutrality is a necessity to the growth of this nation. You can not put a price on it. Do not let this go to the way side for a few billion. It is not worth it in the end.
—Matthew Gonzalez, West Palm Beach, FL

This is absolutely ridiculous. Such a thing should not even be considered, for the internet is a free space for worlds to gather and unite to share each other of various, many experiences and stories, along with providing leisure for the tired.
—Chris Kang, Duluth, GA

there is absolutely nothing to gain, not even profit for websites.
—Kristna, ,

We all benefit from net neutrality, the only ones who benefit otherwise are monopolies
—Connor Dunlap, Concord, NC

Please return the internet to it's neutrality, if it were to become something akin to television I would no longer to be able to keep in contact with many people who are very important to me, and others would lose income for their businesses, or a teenager could lose their support network if most of their friends were only reachable through online means. Thank you!
—Autumn Garrett, Wasilla, AK

If Net-Neutrality is not upheld, the decision will pave the way for a degree of censorship reserved for an underdeveloped 3rd-world police state.
—Richard Shallbetter, Minneapolis, MN

If you wanna keep going with the whole freedom motto you should probably try living up to it for once, just saying.
—Gc, South San Francisco, CA

Please stop giving big companies all of the power in this country!
—Chelsea Verticchio, Jacksonville, IL

The internet is - no, WAS - the last open and free place. I cannot control what content is on the television, and I cannot control how that content comes to me. I cannot communicate with the content creators on television. And I cannot access a huge multitude of content on the television. By killing net neutrality, you've made the internet like television. You're killing the PEAK of human communication. You've destroyed the one thing that can literally unite not just our nation, but our world. You've undermined all the work put into this service by multiple communities over years. You've set back the human race. For the sake of companies getting richer. Great job.
—Rani Eimers, Rapid City, SD

Fuck capitalism
—Gabrielle Hudson, Concord, NC

Please.
—Frederic Leake, Raleigh, NC

Net Neutrality is a good thing, the less we have to pay to access the internet the less enraged people are.
—Not Important, Delaware, OH

No.
—Shannon, Carlsbad, CA

Killing Net Neutrality means killing the free and open expression of milllions of americans. That's not what this country is about and I will not stand for it.
—Olivia Scott, Ft Mitchell, KY

This will ruin the internet.
—Myles, ,

The Internet should remain open and free for everybody. ISPs make enough money already with what we are are paying to access the net. This is unethical and a shame. These monopoly companies like Verizon are infringing in the rights of the American people of free speech. If FCC current leaders don't restore net neutrality immediately, we the citizens of the USA will demand the government to replace the FCC leadership with leaders capable of doing their jobs.
—Jeanne M Mohammadein, Ridgewood, NY

please stop ruining our lives, anti-net-neutrality greedy money grubbers.
—Nic Ganglen, ,

This is not okay and people will not stand for it. You think we will lie down and continue to let big business turn us into a third world nation, but you're wrong.
—Caroline Desrosiers, Ruskin, FL

Bring back our net neutrality.
—Gordan D., , fuck da internet police

—Blake, Lexington, KY

HOW COULD YOU?
—Alex, Renton, WA

What the actual fuck.
—Lysa Crandall, Columbia, SC

Net neutrality is essential for an equal internet. Our society and culture thrives on the equal access of knowledge and opinions the internet offers us. Please don't negate our progress!
—Emily Coleman, Minneapolis, MN

The internet is not television. Television is an outdated, corrupt system in and of itself. All you are doing is worsening the world even more. We're meant to be making this a better place for the future. Stop. Being. Fucking. Twats. Do better.

creating a cast system for the internet would be devastating, there's no way I would be able to afford it, and I know that the only people who would, would be the ones who have to use it for their jobs, those people have enough to worry about.
—Sara Francis, King George, VA

This is not freedom. This is the opposite of freedom.
—M Mills, Brighton, MA

Bring it back please!
—Rachel Woodring, ,

The internet is small business start-ups crucial to our economy. It is a huge part of education, which is investing in our future. It is being able to access tax and insurance forms and advice, it is locating and contacting pontential employers, it's existence as a public utility is absolutely crucial to society.
—Virginia Berry, Alexandria, VA

no. youre stupid. america is free. we will take our freedom back if you take it from us
—Noel Waldron, High Bridge, NJ

Though, I can understand that the Internet may need some touching up to be secure and profitable. This is in no way the way to go about it. I hope that you will reconsider.
—Conal Delaney, South Plainfield, NJ

I owe so much to the internet and it's communication purposes for finding many of my interests, friends, and stances on social issues that are SO important. This is taking 8 miles-worth of steps back and I assure you if this ISN'T undone we'll just weasel are way around this as much as possible and that'll just be more shit for everyone. No one wants that. Stop trying to fuck with net neutrality.
—Lucas Peterson, San Gabriel, CA

Bruh....chill. smh.
—Jefferson Lowery, Northport, AL

let the internet be free!
—Amanda Love, Myakka City, FL

The FCC sucks butt
—Emily Freeman, Bartlesville, OK

Don't take away our internet, please. For some of us, it's the only thing in life that has few to no restrictions. Lets keep this one thing pure
—Tessa Castellow, Little Elm, TX

Please restore it.
—Ren Tucker, Tucson, AZ

This is unfair to everyone. The internet offers information, unlimited connections to family far away and making friends
—Claire, Bethlehem, PA

I may not be from the US, but I think this is wrong and should not proceed. We need to protect what we have now, not limit people more on what they can access and better themselves with, because they cannot afford to access higher tiers of service. It's not fair.
—Jeffery McMurran, ,

I'm near-broke after paying normal bills; don't make me pay to connect with my friends and relax online, too. Restore net neutrality, please!
—Aj, Corpus Christi, TX

This is an extreme infringement on our rights. This is wrong. This is criminal. This is greedy. It's fucking disgusting.
—Victoria Ranowiecki, Erie, PA

Net Neutrality helps kids in bad homes ask for help, people suffering from eat disorders confide in strangers who care more than their doctors, people with social anxiety safely socialize, educate those who's schools are lacking or shut down, and branch us out enough to meet other people across the world who share our love and passions. Net Neutrality saved my life when I ran away from my abusive parents and continues to help me grow as a Trans*man working two jobs and going to school.
—Jason Correa, Orlando, FL

da fuck bro
—Steven Yuan, Plano, TX

"There was a fantastic universal sense that whatever we were doing was right, that we were winning. And that, I think, was the handle, that sense of inevitable victory over the forces of Old and Evil. Not in any mean or military sense; we didn't need that. Our energy would simply prevail." - Hunter S Thompson
—Evan Jackewicz, Magnolia, DE

WHY WOULD YOU ALLOW THIS ASSHOLES! FIX IT PLEASE!
—Kimberly Szekely, Melbourne, FL

The Internet was supposed to be a free place, free to express ourselves, free to get content that is supposed to be free that people put up for free at higher speeds, and now you WANT us to pay to get all this for faster? How DARE you cut our freedom off like this? Especially without getting input from the majority, but from only big business?! I am all for small and large businesses alike, but cable companies have taken this too far. As the sidenote on this site says, TELL THE FCC TO START TREATING CABLE COMPANIES LIKE COMMUNICATION SERVICES AND RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY.
—Madison Greene, Houston, TX

WHY WOULD YOU DO THIS?????!?!?!
—Cam, Concord, NC

I will sign these petitions until i'm blue in the face.
—Cassi, Cincinnati, OH

WTF
—Alexandra Scott, Yellow Springs, OH

Bring Net neutrality back
—Jacey Reiman, Mukwonago, WI

This is a horrible thing. Getting rid of Net Neutrality will ruin the internet. You really should've taken the opinions of the citizens into account before you made this decision because now you have a big uprising. This was pretty stupid honestly.
—Rachel Martin, Fort Smith, AR

Equal information for all!!
—Jonathan VanLandingham, Jackson, MS

I want net neutrality
—Manuel Banuelos, Moreno Valley, CA

Seriously, do this for your kids and greatgrandkids. You might be able to afford it, but who says they will?
—Anthony Joseph Badalamenti, Somers Point, NJ

All information is free and should be treated as such, without discrimination by thr large corporations that now control access to it.
—Quinn Bowman, De Pere, WI

Fuck you, government.
—Trace, Joplin, MO

grrrr
—Clara, Quincy, MA

In today's society, many things are accessible only through the internet: job and college applications, information, communication. Not to mention the fact that many people, especially artists and writers, can ONLY make their career work through an online base. Most of the country is strapped for money, and getting rid of net neutrality denies people access to what has become a necessity in everyday life.
—Taulima, Garden Grove, CA

Please bring back net neutrality
—, Eugene, OR

Wow. Pls fix
—Nick Meier, Plymouth, MI

You know that anyone who knows what Net Neutrality is wants it to stay.
—Jessica Wiedman, Greenbrier, TN kill this i want freedom on the web.

—Taylor Cofield, Anoka, MN

why would ya do this! we/our parents already pay electric bills!
—Liz Lopez, Fremont, CA

The internet is not something to be exploited. It's meant to be for everyone to enjoy as they please. Don't be so greedy.
—Briana Queen, White Plains, MD

Keep the net accessible to people of all classes and incomes. Fuck big business.
—Holly Riordan, Pacifica, CA

The end of net neutrality, and the beginning of the tiered pricing structures to control access to areas of the internet will be the downfall of the internet as we know it. The internet's very appeal lays on the basis that it IS FREE. Please restore net neutrality and do not give cable companies the power to charge more for access to parts of the internet.
—Cody Bates, Arlington, VA

I know some people might use this as a soapbox, but I'm pretty sure you all know what this could mean for the people who use the internet on a daily basis. Keeping up with this elitist attitude of "money gets first pick" is simply indecent, and it simply has to stop.
—Chris M, Rancho Cordova, CA

Keep the Net Free
—Elijah Jamall, Jacksonville, FL

We pay enough for everything as it is. Why do we have to pay MORE?
—Selena DiZazzo, ,

no
—, El Cajon, CA

Please help
—Rita Rucker, North Tonawanda, NY

As a student and an artist, I need the internet to do research for classes, and to get the word out about my artwork and hopefully make a little money on the side. Money I can't afford to spend on paying more for internet when I'm already paying almost fifty bucks a month. I should not have to choose between my education and food.
—Corey Klinzing, Chicago, IL

This will drastically reduce the amount of online ANYTHING that people do on a daily basis, from social media to shopping! It will ruin online companies; it will strain the pockets of those who are self-employed, who use the internet as a means of selling their products. The effects this will have on users who use the internet for recreational means is just too baffling to even think of! Consider colleges and other schools that use the internet for teaching purposes! Schools would be stressed to cut funding even further if they are pressed to spend more for the internet than they do currently! College students already have it hard enough, boosting their bills is simply cruel, especially when they need the freedom the internet provides for research and studying. Not to mention to keep in touch with family if they were long-distance! This system will only push online users away, from buying computer products AND internet usage. Please correct the agency's past mistake and leave net as it is: neutral.
—Amber Thomas, Columbiana, AL

The internet is where a lot of people learn things that they aren't able to teach in schools. Making people pay more for it is wrong.
—Miranda, Jamestown, NY

One of the basis of liberty in this country has always been freedom of communication. Although never explicitly outlined, the right to gather, the right to freedom of press, the availability of a mail service- all have come together to allow Americans to communicate freely. A ruling against net neutrality is a step in the wrong direction.
—Connor Nelson, Falls Church, VA

This is seriously not okay. Why does everything have to be about money. If this isn't stopped it will hurt so many people and negatively affect the country.
—Mariam Abdou, Newark, DE

1st Amendment? Right to personal property? Any of these ring a bell?
—Jordan Obrastoff, Seattle, WA

This entire situation is problematic on a functional level. While I respect the men and women of the appeals court, they do not appear to have much knowledge of how the internet truly works, and what this relatively "free space" means to humanity as a whole. Please, please, please reconsider this ruling. It's not about money, it's about people. Be decent.
—Jessica Bogardus, Oklahoma City, OK

Net neutrality is and important and relatively free commodity in these trying times. Limiting it to big brand companies and trafficking where we go as people is juxtaposing on net freedom. Restore net neutrality.
—Taylor, Murrieta, CA

The Internet is not TV and shouldn't be treated as such, no matter what money-hungry cable companies say.
—Danielle Moulton, Ambler, PA

WE NEED NET NEUTRALITY. People of all incomes need access to the internet.
—Adam Bradstreet, Palermo, ME

Stop being greedy you fucking Bastards.
—Rowan Mitchell, Deland, FL

Net Neutrality is essential
—Laura Neufeld, ,

Protect the American People. Protect our right to information. Protect Net Neutrality.
—Dean Wilderman, Dunedin, FL

We'll be a stronger democracy if we have equal access to information. Don't weaken our freedom.
—Stevie VanBronkhorst, Juneau, AK

The Internet should be free for all and not controlled by big companies.
—Madison, ,

Please restore net neutrality.
—Akira Wu, Sugar Land, TX

The internet is pretty much part of our culture and it's hard enough to afford things as it is in this nation. Stop trying to suck us dry when we barely have anything as it is.
—Christian Weaver, Houston, TX

The internet is the single greatest thing that has happened to the right to free speech since talking was invented. Please preserve it!!!
—Samantha Gambon, Tallahassee, FL

How DARE you try to turn the world of free information into a means to make profit off the masses? What in the blazes is wrong with you people? Knowledge is for EVERYONE. Not just those who can afford it! We do not live in medieval times! So stop treating our world as if we were!
—Isaac Val, Clifton, NJ

I'm disgusted by this —Allegra Wolff, Lake Oswego, OR what the fuck america.

—Nicole Lozinski, Chicago, IL

The net is a place of freedom..
—Michelle Faella, Johnston, RI

Please bring back net neutrality. There are many people who can not afford to pay anymore than they already are. I realize that culture is changing, but remember that there will be those who what to adapt with the changes that can't financially.
—Sara, Hopkins, MN

The Net is not something to restrict!
—Spenser Araujo, Napa, CA

Please stop this
—Kyu Bin Kwon, ,

Verizon owns a huge chunk of the cell phone users, towers, service, etc... You can't own everything. People will find ways around it. The internet is world wide and should stay that way.
—Kimberly Malone, Lubbock, TX

Living in Canada, but hold dual citizenship...sometimes I just want to pretend I'm not American in times like this though. Seriously what is wrong with you people?
—Anna, ,

wtf guys. the realm is fricked up as it is, with the us overpaying for tv,phone, and internet service and the worst quality of it all, but now you are saying that we can only go on certain websites and have to pay more for those websites?
—Jason Shweky, Brooklyn, NY

Net neutrality must be remain. It makes most people's life easier, you heard that?!
—Anissa Sakinah, ,

With internet access considered a human right by the UN, limiting access to the internet literally limits access to a basic right of modern life. Those who help maintain and govern the US must consider the benefit of the people, not just business and capital. This is an issue of access to and expression of free speech. The internet is a tool for thought, education, an expression. Limiting this is against the founding morals of the United States.
—Hannah Zaehringer, Davis, CA

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!
—Daniel Garcia, Arlington, TX

The internet is a tool of communication and collaboration. It is a different beast entirely than television and therefore cannot be regulated as such. The government is archaic when it comes to technology, but in this age that is not acceptable. You cannot treat this constantly evolving technology the same way you have treated other static technology in the past. Regulations such as this stifle innovation and will prevent further growth in the technological sector.
—Alliyah Rose Taylor, Jackson, MS

Equal access is the just and fair way to go: restore net neutrality!
—Mariel Blomstrand, Saint Paul, MN

This action gives these companies too much power to restrict certain content. This could result in censorship and restrict the freedom to use the internet.
—Monica Wilkinson, Carmichael, CA

dont fuck with my internet.
—Mallory Curtis, Cary, NC

The internet is a communal infrastructure of society and should not be regulated in this way for the same reason that it would be ridiculous to only allow billion dollar corporations to use interstates.
—Tyler Butler, Pensacola, FL

Net neutrality is so important.
—Jackie Hall, London, KY

Please, this is so important.
—Karlin Scudder, Cedar Rapids, IA

I'm too outrages at the moment to say anything other than FUCK THIS. It's totally unacceptable.
—Sabrina Johnson, White Hall, MD

Please don't do this to us.
—David Gonzalez, Novato, CA

Please defend my rights.
—George Eaton Kephart, Los Alamos, NM

This ruling is fucking garbage.
—Puck Waite, Twentynine Palms, CA

I am a animator and I use the internet to sell my art work to companies. Keeping the Net neutral makes it possible for companies to access my work easily. I work in a very competitive field and keeping the net neutral is directly related to my livelihood as a citizen of these United States.
—Carmen, Novato, CA

The internet must remain open, for the free flow of ideas and information is one of the few things that can maintain an informed populace.
—Andrew Hines, Hansville, WA

Open internet has given access to information on a scale never seen before. To commoditize access to websites would be to isolate the lower and middle classes even further by making information inaccessible due to cost.
—Shauna, Saint Robert, MO

No way am I going to have to pay to access certain sites.
—Naomi Pan, Brooklyn, NY

Please, this is very important.
—Diana Frank, Santa Rosa, CA

dude wtf people are stupid.
—Kyle Moran, Northridge, CA

—Sam, Phoenix, AZ

this would ruin many lives of struggling artist who get their money from commissions online
—Kaleb Myka Tyson, Louisville, KY

Please keep free Internet. It's all I have —Jessica Gleaves, Fayetteville, NC

Absurd. Just seriously. If anything can prove that there is hope left for this country, that it is still America the Free and not Corporate America, do not do this.
—Adam Ruth, Kingsland, GA

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!
—Kate, Marion, IA

We do need major reconstruction of the Internet after it's held accountable for the destroyed lives and families for its negligence of ethics and morals. Everything isn't about making prophet all the time or being #1. We need to focus on doing the right thing for others positively that benefits the consumer. I have a personal interest because Facebook destroyed my family along with other companies that will be held accountable.
—Markayle Williams, Phoenix, AZ

#bribesmuch?
—Matthew Muller, Canton, SD

This is terrible and I hope it get's fixed.
—Luis Ricardo Trujillo, Astoria, OR

The FCC doesn't seem to understand how important access to the internet is to people. I want this to change. The internet needs to be treated as a neutral field and noone should have to pay more to access certain sites. Cable companies need to stop being greedy bastards.
—Draven Mueller, Milwaukie, OR

Please don't classify the internet. We have enough of that.
—Melissa Baron, Bourbonnais, IL

This seems entirely unconstitutional. Where is our right to freedom of speech if you're giving people ways to blockade that right. Just another way to make money. Leave the internet alone, not all of us are wealthy enough to pay for every little thing we do. Christ, this is ridiculous. I shouldn't even have to be petitioning this.
—Ciana Gregory, Apopka, FL

The internet is a resource for vast information. Even if it's a service not provided by a company, there should be no altering of the internet, whether speed or availability. Please, FCC, rethink the decision and restore Net Neutrality.
—Michael Waddell, Sidney, MT

Don't you dare take away one of the few open, free things in many people's lives.
—Emma Hathaway, Northampton, MA

i already pay my service provider, having to additional fees to access websites that are already free is ridiculous. whatever money grubbing assholes in congress thought up this needs to be stopped
—Angie Anders, Fort Worth, TX

Restore net neutrality. The ones who will suffer most from this are often the ones who need access the most -- the students, the low-income people, the job-seekers, the public schools. Fix this now before we all suffer.
—Susannah Ferdinand, Baltimore, MD

I fine it so disgusting that some company would do this -.-
—SnowStar, Cleveland, OH

WHAT THE ABSOLUTE SHITSTAINING FUCK. NO SERIOUSLY. WHAT THE FUCK. MOST OF US ARE ALREADY CASH STRAPPED AS IT IS AND WE DONT EXACTLY HAVE A SURPLUS OF FUCKING JOBS TO PAY OUTRIGHT FOR THESE OUTRAGEOUS SHIT. THIS IS AS BAD AS THE NSA. MAYBE A LITTLE WORSE. TINY BIT. GOD THIS GETS ME SO FUCKING ANGRY YOU DONT EVEN FUCKING UNDERSTAND. OR MAYBE YOU DO. AT ANY FUCKING RATE, THIS IS ANNOYING AS HELL THAT WE HAVE TO SIGN A FUCKING PETITION TO KILL THIS SON OF A BITCH. (THE SON OF A METAPHORICAL BITCH BEING THE DICKMONGERING CROTCHSTAINING GARBAGE THAT IS THIS BILL OR LAW OR WHATEVER THE FUCK THIS HORSEPILE OF PRICKISH SHIT IS.) AT ANY FUCKING RATE, LET'S GET THIS SHIT DONE, DONE-R THAN ANY BUNS, HUN. LET'S ROAST THESE FUCKING BUNS UNTIL THEY'RE BURNT BUNS THAT NO ONE WILL WANT TO EVEN FUCKING TOUCH.
—carcinoGeneticist, Dewey, IL

No. This is my generation. The internet, free and clear, is all we have. Everything we have. Take this away and realize that anyone who touched the net and was in power will be lacking a job. I am old enough to vote. We are old enough to vote.

Everyone's voice deserves the same chance to be heard as anyone else because everyone's ideas are important, everyone's thoughts and opinions are valuable, and everyone's interpretation unique. We deserve to be heard equally.
—Elizabeth Bergersen, Fort Collins, CO

This is abusive and a blatant action taken out of greed and with no regards for the users. The internet is free and it is not the place of ISPs to charge extra for providing access when we are already paying for the service they are providing. Any and all extra fee to allow access to websites is absurd.
—Renata Souza, ,

This is not OK. Net neutrality must continue to be a thing. I'm tired of paying out the ass for everything, the internet is the one thing that's (mostly) free anymore. Leave it that way.

Restore Net Neutrality. Internet Service Providers cannot be allowed to censor the internet. This will give Internet Service Providers an unfair advantage in the free market, and it will have a negative impact upon all Americans, as a result. This is a tactic to effectively eliminate competition.

We broke this country off from Great Britain partly to get away from their political corruption. What a wonderful lot of good that seems to have done, though. :/ Net neutrality is a must. Don't give up on it because cable companies are wasting millions on keeping their lobbyists hovering over your shoulders.
—Kyle Brown, Cedar Park, TX

What a fantastic way to destroy globalization and every aspect of unity we have worked for since the internet gave us the ability to. If this bill becomes valid, and this is passed, it will have a massive, negative impact on the future of this planet - all for the sake of a small group of people having more money. Isn't it about time we stopped cutting off our nose to spite our face? Isn't it about time we stopped injuring and inhibiting thousands of people for the sake of making a few bucks? This country is going to shit, and this is one way to speed up the process.
—Keara Dooley, Pell Lake, WI

Destroying Net Neutrality is like forcing someone to pay extra to access different sections of a library, and the sections the people in charge don't want the reader to see are disorganized and rarely reshelved. Making us pay for the library card (pay for ISP) is reasonable, if undesirable, but more than that is destroying the best tool humans have made in the quest for knowledge distributions.
—Mac McCarver, Florence, AL

Net neutrality is important. It shouldn't be thrown away for the sake of consumerism.
—Annie Eggleston, Lovingston, VA

Heck no
—Kalen, Kilgore, TX

Net Neutrality allows everyone access to information. That is extremely important. Equal access to all websites is one of the things that makes the internet such a great tool. Changing that by making money a factor alienates a huge subset of people. It's unfair.
—Chris Mendez, Chula Vista, CA

We are already funding war and other expensive "necessities" in the USA today. Being able to go online and just hang out with my friends and share so many memories and conversations is something very valuable to me, especially since I don't see a lot of people, due to distance. So please don't take that privilege away from me, or from anyone else for that matter. My family already is too poor to afford many things, so if we have to pay for extra use of certain websites, we will have a hard time living. This is also especially saddening because I do online home-schooling. If I can't get access to certain (online) resources that I need to use, then I can't attend school. And I am still in high school, so being unable to complete my work is some thing I can't just start doing. That is not an option. So please don't take away mine, or anyone else's opportunity to use the internet in how it was before. I may just be a simple case (with my schooling, and that means a lot to me) but there are also so many other people out there who run businesses, helpful websites, charity/donation websites, etc. that would decrease dramatically, due to the lack of visitors on their website. This would lead to a lack of money being used (since you have to use it just to get to the website). And therefore, in the end, worsening the economy, that is already terrible.
—Naomi Christiansen, Boston, MA

I already pay a lot for school. My classes are partly online. Every class. I need the internet in order to graduate. Not being able to access some sites, or not knowing that I can reach a certain site, would be a huge problem for me. That is just one small reason for one individual person why net neutrality is important.
—Sadie Poppino, Boise, ID

Net Neutrality is essential to the free, creative, ever-changing internet we've grown accustomed to. The internet is completely different from other mediums, and must be treated as such - keep it open and free.
—Janine Dana, Pacifica, CA

I understand the FCC wants to do what's best for the corporations and the only sort of people with resources to communicate with them on a constant basis. But please keep in mine that 10% of the United States owns 90% of the wealth. That means that about 10% of the US has resources to do these things and actually have the time to be represented. But the remaining 90% of the U.S are not represented, so such regulations should not be made without their consideration. Money is not greater than people. And if the FCC wants this country to begin collapsing, please kill net neutrality, in the long run, we will all regret it.
—Osvaldo Armas, Miami, FL

The internet should be viewed just as a public library, it should rightly be under the public domain and a free and open source of information, inspiration, and innovation for all people and this should not be impinged upon by the powers of corporations. If the internet is not free and open it is a death blow to the future of innovation, inspiration, communication, and the future of humanity in general. It will also be a death blow to the corporations themselves because people will invent alternate means to circumvent corporations and this will lead to their decline. To end, net neutrality is the only practical answer for both the public and corporations like Verizon.
—Daniel Coelho, New Bedford, MA

This needs to stop.
—Madaline Whay, Rapid City, SD

Killing Net Neutrality will be the end of fairness online, as well as increasing the already enormous stranglehold big business has on the media. The Internet should be a service free to everyone. It allows people to set up small businesses and gives them opportunities they ordinarily wouldn't have. —Chelsea Knapp, Perry, MI

Please don't do this! I'm trying to get my state representative to back the Tim Tebow Bill and allow homeschoolers to participate in UIL activities. The Internet is quickly and easily providing crucial information that I need to make this happen, and if I can't get access to it in an efficient manner, then I won't be able to continue fighting for the bill. Many people rely on the open internet for their income. As an example, many freelance artists rely on people seeing their art on DeviantArt and tumblr, visiting their site, and buying their artwork. However, if Net Neutrality is struck down, that will not happen. That person might not be able to eat. They might lose their home. The internet is for utility and information as much as it is for entertainment. It is wrong to monetize and create tiers for this valuable resource in order for corporations to make further profits on the citizenry.
—Rebekah Tesnovich, Davison, MI

I think ISP providers shouldn't even exist, they are a service that is doing something that a public office should. If internet connections were something that was a public utility, something like electricity or water, that is essentially optional as a home owner/renter, there could be instead of a monopoly of a market and rather a tax that we as citizens could optionally pay to use.
—Keith Michael Wilson, Bel Air, MD

I'm shocked this needs restoring, it should have never been needed in the first place for crying out loud. Shame it's come to that —Ed McGowan, Colchester, VT

The world is changing. In today's digital age, we rely on computers and the internet to an alarming degree. The internet is, effectively, the central hub for life today. Through it, we can communicate with friends, do research, complete work, watch movies, create music...it is a tool through which anything is possible. That is, until we lost Net Neutrality. Imagine, if you would, a city that only allows people to enter on a specific airline. That airline could then charge whatever it wants because it would have no competition. Essentially, it creates a monopoly. Would the people stand by and let that happen? Would they go along with corporate greed that inconveniences all but a select few? No! The same is true for the internet. If we allow certain providers to give privileges to specific sites, if we allow sites to become exclusive to those providers, how is that not a monopoly? Imagine a world where only Time Warner customers can access Google and YouTube, while Verizon becomes the sole distributor of Facebook. How is that fair to either party? Do YOU want to live in a world where only certain people can access certain sections of modern society? What are you willing to give up? Because that's what can happen without Net Neutrality. History tells us of great people would tore down monopolies for the benefit of the people. Do you want to be remembered among them? Or do you want to be forever known as the people who doomed the internet? The people who stopped the flow of information, of content, of creativity? Do you want to be the ones responsible for destroying society as we know it? How do you want to be remembered?
—David Johnson, Buffalo, NY

Keep Net Nutrality!

Commercial greed has already laid waste to the housing market and banking system. To let it destroy the only true, widespread source of free information would be a stain on the history of human freedoms. The internet is pretty much everyone on earth, coming together and sharing ideas, music, facts, entertainment in general. It's a place where it doesn't matter how much your mom gets paid, or how much money you make or whether or not you can afford nice things. You're making it into a privilege and it shouldn't be. Could you make a fortune? Of course. Could you make billions of people violently angry? Of course, and that's exactly what you're going to do. If you think making the internet a tangle of hassling payments is a good idea u dead wrong son.

—Amanda, Memphis, TN

The access to the Internet is not something that should be restricted upon. Net neutrality is a right.
—Dustin Cleveland, Kenosha, WI

Please dont make the internet controlled through money, thats not what makes the internet a thriving place. If this continues then the cable companies get to suck money out of people with no second thought and thats not what I want the internet to be.
—Zach B, Greeley, CO

Not that America gives a shit about human rights, but freedom to access information can arguably be a human right. This is just going to kill creativity and create all sorts of barriers based on income for the average consumer. The internet isn't TV and sites are fundamentally different from the previous generation of media.
—Xavier Chua, ,

This decision has ramifications worldwide. It doesn't seem fair that an American authority can make decisions about websites the rest of the world uses, simply because they were created in America. We need an open internet globally.

—Amanda Fuhrmann, Santa Rosa, CA

The Internet was created by the people, for the people. Not the government. Not big budget corporations. Just us average citizens, the 99% of the populace. To take that away would speak volumes of the current state of our country and give plenty of reasoning to potential riots.

—Henry, Los Angeles, CA

The internet is a wealth of creativity and limiting it's acess to only the rich will squash one of the last non Commercial spaces we have left. Please consider what it would mean to the people who aren't pasdihg your pockets but are innovating for the future.
—Amanda DeMarco, Salem, NH

I seriously can't believe I have to sign ANOTHER thing to save net neutrality. Get it through your thick skulls. WE LIKE NET NEUTRALITY. IT IS A GOOD THING. YOU SHOULD FEEL BAD FOR TRYING TO TAKE IT AWAY FROM US. That is all.
—Leah Grachis, High Springs, FL

I seriously how no words on how idiotic this is.
—Kelsi Hughes, Maryville, TN

Abolishing Net Neutrality goes against the wishes of everyone in the United States that is currently not working for Time Warner or Comcast.
—Matthew Ramsey Warren, Seattle, WA

It's absolutely ridiculous that I even have to send in this appeal for my freedom from greed on the internet.
—James Bailey, Sacramento, CA non-net neutrality is inherently classist and racist...

—, San Francisco, CA

Just a reminder, FCC: Corporations are NOT people. Listen to the (millions of impoverished and/or underprivileged) voices of America: We NEED equal access to the internet.
—Troy, San Leandro, CA

Restore net neutrality.
—Vanessa Pereira, South Dartmouth, MA

China censors their internet and you see how well that's going. This is literally the one place where people can go and just be themselves and you want to take that away. Where art can be art. Monitoring it wont fix anything. Hackers will always find a way around it.

Land of the free!
—Don Collins, Chico, CA

I don't even know what the hell is wrong with America but things like these are why your economy is shot down to the ground. Don't contribute to the problem. Keep net neutrality.
—Jade Kim, Boston, MA

This is not an unreasonable request. The internet is about access, not profit.
—Sara Pohlman, Lodi, CA

Our country should be better then this. To restrict the information unless you pay more for it, It's sickening .
—Carol Shallick, Gillett, PA

The internet belongs to people, not corporations.
—Heather H, Harrisonburg, VA

What the actual fuck?
—Shawn Harries, West Richland, WA

We should not have to pay for internet like TV, internet subscriptions cost too much already —Alex Gweenbank, San Jose, CA

Basically a utility in the first world - the Internet isn't just for entertainment anymore.
—Leonard, Ivoryton, CT

JUSTICE
—Mardi Billman, Fort Collins, CO

It's ridiculous that we have to fight for my right to enjoy the internet. You cannot let this happen!
—Jonathan, Owensboro, KY

Don't you dare try to make the internet into some kind of television, with your 'PAY-per-view' and annoying commercials. We pay enough just to have access to it, we don't want to be sucker in paying more for something that's already free. I don't want to have to pay a toll just so I can see some of my favorite sites, I don't want to be stopped randomly or during a set time limit (<--KEY WORD HERE) to see some add. I get enough of that with youtube, thank you very much. I also don't want companies to come into play, see the cash cow you're trying to let loose, and milk the thing forever hard earned penny we NON-corporate citizens earn. Thank you for your time in reading this, have a good day and keep your greedy hands off the internet.
—Angelica, Bridgeport, CT

This will kill small businesses, please protect net neutrality and give them a chance against larger entrenched companies.
—Justo Herrera, Schertz, TX

Why try to fix something that's working fine?
—Dutronc, ,

If you want to get more money, find other ways.
—Lynne Nguyen, Highland, CA

The internet is a place of vast learning and entertainment possibilities. By allowing this ruling, many people will not be able to partake in the wonderful world wide web anymore.
—Victoria A King, Pink Hill, NC

As an artist who relies heavily on the internet to share my work to the world, this is extremely important to me. I would never have been able to improve, to learn, to be the person I am today without the Internet, and to deny anyone that sort of free access on account of money is disgusting.
—Taylor Leong, San Francisco, CA

It's our last bastion of truly free information exchange.
—Joshua, Orlando, FL

The Internet came into existence without you. If you force us, we will make another, also without you. Make the wise choice with logic in mind, not money.
—Nathaniel McWaters, Belton, TX

Net Neutrality really should be a basic principle of the Internet as it stops ISPs from limiting certain freedoms that people enjoy. As a citizen of the United States, I see Net Neutrality as a way to keep those rights from being taken away by private corporations that would prefer to see me pay for those rights instead. Also, from an economic standpoint, it almost ensures that one company will not monopolize the ISP market, and that allows our economy to stay healthy.
—Brian Sagaser, South Jordan, UT

Think of the economic damage caused to small businesses and independent artists, artisans, and contractors of every stripe, who use the internet as an invaluable communications service for every step of business from marketing to payment. Or the unemployed or underemployed like myself, who rely on the internet for networking and job searching, and could lose even that small edge to cable companies arbitrarily raising our bills. Think of scientists exchanging information and ideas around the globe, of international collaboration, of journalists and citizens in places facing war and disaster ignored by the mainstream media struggling to be heard. Think of those who spend most of their time at home, everybody from stay-at-home moms to the disabled, to whom social websites are their primary form of interaction. And not merely unessential chatter, but vital, even life-saving communication. Somewhere out there, right this moment, there is a suicidal teenager holding on for another day because of a friend from across the world talking with them on a message board. Or an abused wife or child, finding support in secret, the only way she can, and getting the tools and connections she needs to get out. I know this; I've been in both of those situations. So have a lot of other people I've known. Broadband isn't television, plain and simple; the internet isn't a broadcasting station, but the primary form of communication for the majority of people in this country. And it would be absolutely unconscionable to allow a handful of telecommunications CEOs to exploit such a basic need and force their already struggling users to pay extra for services fundamental to their lives, jobs, and well-being.
—C Victoria Root, Watertown, MA

This country is already under the thumb of those with money. Save what we have left.
—Lauren F, Orlando, FL

WE DESERVE TO VISIT WHATEVER WEBSITES WE WANT WITHOUT GETTING CHARGED FOR IT. IT'S RIDICULOUS.
—Ashlynn Armendariz, Fontana, CA

Fuck you. Seriously. If you think this is a good idea go fuck yourself.
—Emil, Lincoln, NE

To end net neutrality is to hand over the freedom of online communication, dissemination of news/information, and essentially a small part of freedom of speech into the hands of corporations. Please reconsider this decision. The internet is an integral part of societal interaction and to let major corporations decide who and what has priority or even access is appalling. Take a stand for the people
—Nick W Lundgren, Simi Valley, CA

Thanks capitalism, you ruin every fucking thing.
—Myshayla Traft-Anderson, Minneapolis, MN

Why does the government want us to pay more for something that connects everyone. Don't fix something that is not broken.
—Jason obando, Silver Spring, MD

NOPE
—Blake Petersen, ,

This is crazy! The internet should be free to anyone and everyone.
—Leah Strunk, Pittston, PA

How are digital artist suppose to make a living with something like this agianst them and their customers
—Rae Lavergne, Smyrna, GA

PLEASE STOP THIS! WE WANT FREEDOM ON INTERNET, NO PAYING MORE TO VIIST CERTAIN SITES!
—Pia Escobar, ,

Net Neutrality is freedom. Don't deny us that. Don't take away the free spread of information. Society depends on communication between everyone. DEFEND NET NEUTRALITY.
—Clara Lepard, Williamston, MI

I can barely afford internet as is. In a day and age in which we ask our elementary school students to have access to a computer and the internet, let alone working adults and college students, additional charges and the commercialization of what should be an accessible commodity is absurd.
—Amanda Smith, Spokane, WA

In Britain they have to pay a television fee. Let's continue going on our merry way away from Britain's tyranny, shall we? Bring net neutrality back!
—Sarah Case, Monument, CO

I am fucking down with people taking away our freedoms.
—Valerie Dee, Bainbridge Island, WA

The internet is for the people and ran by the people dont fuck this up lime you already have the goverment just let society have this one nice thing
—Drew Olson, New Athens, IL

Don't be a jerk America.
—Christian Baker, Webster, TX

The internet as it is will be destroyed if something isn't done to protect it from companies like Verizon and their tiered service plans. The open internet is a sort of mental home to me, and I'm sure many people who grew up online feel the same way. Protect our home. We're watching you.
—Ellen Freund, Osseo, MN

Stop attempting to limit my access to freedom.
—Katherine Looney, Tomball, TX

this whole thing is bullshit I'm so tired of companies who already make a shit ton of money trying to find oppressive ways to squeeze the fucking life out of everybody's bank accounts. FUCK YOU ALL
—Ciaran Evans, Oakland, CA

There is no reason that the internet should be treated in this way. This is absolutely hurting the small businesses that rely on internet as their base for sales, and is hurtful for those of us who rely on internet for work or school and cannot afford to pay extra. Please reconsider, and treat broadband like a communications service. We deserve net neutrality. Please, as a government, think about your PEOPLE and not your wallets.
—Jenyfer Skaggs, Columbus, OH

I think the internet is a wonderful resource the way it is. This is absurd and shouldn't happen. You're taking away one of the key things that makes the internet unique and amazing
—Emily Kimmelman, Trenton, NJ

This not only impacts the people on the internet but the whole industry as we know it. You're doing no good controlling something that is out of your reach.
—Kylie, Tempe, AZ

This proposal is wrong on so many levels that I'm sure FCC is aware but probably, doesn't even care. The internet should be a right and a freedom. Companies might see the internet as a big money net but to actual people it's an enormous part of our culture and taking that away is a crime and ultimately wrong.
—Chae Ford, Port Charlotte, FL

Please rethink. Show you are decent human beings, and look at ALL of the affects it would have on people and businesses on the internet.
—Cheyenne, Salt Lake City, UT

You'd piss off 2/3 of the world population by doing this.
—Mariah, Vancouver, WA

Seriously Government? Get your crap together and figure out ways to restore the economy WITHOUT destroying the rights of the people. The ends do not justify the means congress, you'd do well to learn that.
—Austin Hostetter, Montgomery, MI

The Internet must remain neutral. Stop this nonsense. I literally cannot afford this course of action.
—Megan Albertson, Madison, WI

Power to the People
—Saad, Beaumont, TX

This is ridiculous!
—Sarah Karsten, Kingsley, MI

The internet is a free space - free for everyone. If you're about to charge people extra for websites they frequent, might as well start charging people for walking on the sidewalk not on their personal property. Would be pretty stupid, wouldn't it? So is this.
—Diana Penaranda, ,

The internet is international. You can't monopolize the internet. It's wrong and idiotic.
—Matthew Beach, Pleasanton, CA

Comcast and Time Warner are awful —Payton Macdonald, ,

This is unacceptable.
—Logan Corsaut, Belton, MO

No nigga f off
—Can Xysn, San Diego, CA

I do not have the money to pay extra to access more of the internet. I use the internet for almost all the things I do, including to learn new things (an educational platform). How am I expected to use the internet to do a research project or to look up something if the library does not have the information (which is likely due to the out dated books they have)? Please try to understand how keeping the internet open to ALL people is essential. Especially with the ways it's being used today by many of us.
—Tihara Thomas, Plano, TX

Stop Trying to Control us.
—Samual Gauthier, New Orleans, LA

Why?
—Bren J, Vancouver, WA

Leave the internet ALONE
—Claire Gordon, Nevada, MO

This is UN-AMERICAN.
—Iliana Herrera, Henderson, NV

Stop being so money hungry. This is not ok. Do you think people are going to have money for this? I don't think. Don't alienate people because they don't have money to pay for a website.
—Olive, Hialeah, FL

hell no for losing net neutrality you all in DC are crazy for thinking to change it!

This is wrong and unfair, please dont ruin the internet
—Alec Doyle, Roseville, CA

We'll be paying for air soon if we don't fight.
—Contae Prescott, Cleveland, OH

As the internet is a means for anyone of any age or class to access information and learning materials they may otherwise not have the means to (especially monetarily), I find it disgusting that there are people who want to put this right to information behind a pay wall, and that's only the tip of the iceberg of a problem that destroying net neutrality is.
—Haven Berbel, Mansfield, TX

this affects me as an artist / content creator and as a consumer. this affects free speech. this affects freedom of information. this affects freedom, period. tom wheeler's fascist moves and somehow unspoken conflict-of-interest will not stand the test of time. this will be shut down if we have to shut it down ourselves.
—Duane Aberle, ,

This is a move purely in the direction of large corporate profit.
—Aaron Gregg, Denver, CO

Don't do this
—Cristian, Bakersfield, CA

This is like making someone pay to use a public sidewalk! Sickening!
—Kelsey Holmes, ,

wow
—Matthew Guerrero, Brentwood, CA

It's important that the net neutrality be in effect as it helps the internet to be a dynamic and creative environment, and enables small businesses to be competitive.
—Elyse Willard, Rancho Palos Verdes, CA

Can we all just agree that big corporations have quite enough control over the lives of everyday, average Americans? That'd be great. The internet if a free and open forum that connects millions of people to each other from all over the world. Let's keep it that way.
—Megan Tench, Nashville, TN

Internet == Telecommunications. What's so hard about that?
—Liam Fredlund, Austin, TX

Historically, this is one of the worse steps the computer age could possibly take.
—Paul Gregg, Denver, CO

bro. c'mon. i can't even watch american horror story on my tv. i need the internet to watch it on netflix
—Heidy Lopez, Selma, CA

Please do not give up the internet to corporations. We as Americans deserve our internet to be a free space and not controlled. It would give the power of knowledge only to people who could afford it. Stop this.
—Madison Swackhamer, Lake Oswego, OR

No. DONT DO THIS THING WHY WOULD YOU CONSIDER THIS —Cassandria, ,

Not fuckin cool, yo
—C, Mill Creek, IN

The prevention of spreading of lawful information is an infringement against freedom of speech.
—Skylar Cote, Orland Park, IL

I guess Tom Wheeler really is a dingo. Net Neutrality is essential. Give it back or we will take it back.
—Kori Collebrusco, Petersburg, IL

bring back net neutrality you twats —Marcus Sundwall, Salt Lake City, UT

ugh
—Sarahi Castillo, Anaheim, CA

The fact that ISPs think they can limit the sites I can access unless I pay them is absolutely sickening and ridiculous.
—Alexis, Marysville, WA

The FCC needs to step up and protect the American consumers rights!
—Cathy Coudriet, Pittsburgh, PA

Hey. The Internet is not the same as television. Stop trying to control something that's out of your market.
—Patricia Batsche, Minneapolis, MN

The internet has always been a way of access to sites of all kinds. No matter your ISP, you should be able to surf any site you want for no extra charge. This is how it's been and how it should stay.
—Kyle Boder, Salina, KS

jesus christ this is evil.
—Fernando Rodriguez-Barrera, Nampa, ID

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY! Give us our freedom!
—Montana Schlueter, Chandler, AZ

This is deplorable! The Internet is for everyone, and it should be affordable to everyone! Keep it Neutral!
—Bailey, Salem, IL

This is incredibly important. Please ensure that open access to the internet remains open.
—Benjamin Gaunt, Berkeley, CA

High speed internet is an important part of my life.
—Safaa Siddiqui, New York, NY

this whole deal reeks of classism and oppression. using the internet is a form of self-expression and lower-income companies or individuals are being disproportionately affected by this "internet fast lane" bullshit.
—Hali Fisher, Morris, MN

No, this has to stop, everyone is already so tight on money- it will kill 75% of businesses!
—Tessa, Newbury Park, CA

It's a service, not a cable package.
—Kyle Bridges, Lubbock, TX

Keep our internet safe and free
—Steven McElroy Jr, Lincoln, RI

The monopolization of the internet is sickening. I support a free and fair internet where access is open to everyone regardless of income level. Stop this anti net neutrality legislation NOW.
—Ronan, East Setauket, NY

A free internet keeps our nation strong and competitive, allowing for a greater flow of ideas and innovation. We cannot relegate users to first-, second-, and third-class citizenship. An open internet is a mandate in a democratic nation, and it keeps our country on the same playing field as the rest of the world.
—Joshua Lytle, Arlington, TX

this is stupid as shit
—Vanessa gorton, Grand Junction, CO

Net Neutrality is essential to preserving the American people's First Amendment rights in the 21st century.
—Sarah Lewis, Renton, WA

The end of Net Neutrality is the end of innovation. Support online business, support digital artists, support current and future students. Reclassify.
—C McAdams, Minneapolis, MN

I hope you realize how vital this decision is. Even to us living on the other side of the planet.
—Mikael Lehmuskoski, ,

Fuck man
—Kalei, Sykesville, MD

Dear people who wish for net neutrality not to happen, For once can you think about others. For once think how this will affect other people. How badly this will hurt the economy. How, despite what you think, people who are not in the same social class as you are important. They do not deserve what they go through. But for a few unneeded extra dollars your willing to throw your lessees in social class out. Well here's a message, fuck you.
—Brianna, Martinez, CA

This is ridiculous, make it right.
—Kristy Miller, Cincinnati, OH

The internet should be free and therefore for everyone. We should all get equal opportunity in this and not be divided in some hierachal ladder where those that can afford it can use the internet and those that can't, don't get the opportunity to use it.
—Claudia A., Orlando, FL

Please, save net neutrality.
—Michael Beelek, Draper, UT

As someone who spends most of their time on the internet, net neutrality is extremely important to me. The end of net neutrality would greatly and negatively impact my life. I need this.
—Meg Z., Pittsburgh, PA

Save our internet
—, Maryland Heights, MO

Really!? Are you trying to make people have even more money problems? I shouldn't have to pay for the internet access and specific webpages. This is outrageous. It isn't right!

It's absolutely unacceptable to implement additional charges to access certain websites. Media should be free to the people.
—Thalia Astello, Woodbridge, VA

You cannot invade my homeland like this —Noah Clark, Poulsbo, WA

Please let net neutrality exist!
—, Miami, FL

This would prevent many schools and students from having fair access to online research, as well as hinder day to day gathering of basic knowledge by the average individual. Keeping people from gathering information based on how much they can pay is not only the opposite of equal opportunity but taking away one of their basic freedoms.
—Megan Hawkins, Gladstone, OR

As a writer, I use the internet both to research and publish my work. Like millions of other artists, journalists, students and regular users, a free and open internet is a crucial necessity to my career and livelihood. Please work in the interest of the citizens and not corporations, and assure that the internet remains a font of information for all.
—Sean Doyle, Midlothian, IL

THIS NEEDS TO STOP this will effect us all and widen the ever growing gap between the rich and the working class
—Richelle Alcock, ,

The internet is the exchange of free information among all mankind. It is the greatest innovation of our time, spawning revolutions and organized efforts that before were unthinkable. Don't take away the evolution of humanity for the sake of money.
—Dave Leva, Harleysville, PA

This is just getting silly.
—Chris S, Tacoma, WA

LIBERTY OF THE INTERNET!!!
—Fernando Anzola, ,

What are you guys THINKING?! I'm very disappointed in you and this decision. This is yet ANOTHER thing that benefits government and big business and not the people. It's ridiculous. Pleas please please take this back.
—Anesha, Los Angeles, CA

This cannot happen!!! Net Neutrality is essential for the internet because without it, the internet will end AMD the only thing left will be a skeleton of a once great era in human history.
—Gurpiar Gill, Fresno, CA

This can be considered a direct infringement on my freedom of speech since depending on the network and prices of things I will not be able to access certain sites that allow me to express myself.

Don't let the gap get wider between those with money and those without.
—Diana Roach, Canyon Country, CA

The internet isn't like television- its purpose was never to be controlled by money through various channels and networks. It's a free space, full of opportunity and information. You have no right to try to market THAT like you do EVERYTHING ELSE IN THIS COUNTRY.
—Rebecca Mayhew, Denver, CO

The internet does not belong to anyone. So people should not force us to pay for free information, or communication!
—Dennis T. Nguyen, San Jose, CA

Capitalism should NOT dictate the liberty of any person.
—Bob Skerry, Milford, MA

The Net is more than mere entertainment, and hampering access by whatever means does a disservice to its necessity in the world today.
—Kyle Tekaucic, Columbus, OH

Please restore net neutrality. A broadband connection is a form of communication, not a convenience to be left to the oversight of bloated corporations. Reducing or removing net neutrality results in a more poorly-informed populace and functions solely to favor the giant corporations that find cutting huge swaths of the global population off from each other an acceptable sacrifice for more revenue. Protect the population, not the corporation. Please restore net neutrality.
—Joel R. Phillips, North Las Vegas, NV

I am going to write a letter!
—Anthony Aldrete, Pomona, CA

I'm quite honestly disgusted with the notion that internet is being monopolized and used as a cash machine like television. As someone who uses the internet daily and would have to pay the price this is unsatisfactory and appalling. The internet would be cut up into economical classes of who could see what, which is disgusting. One of the biggest points of the internet is that anyone can contribute no matter who they are. Removing net neutrality kills that principal and I find that horrific.
—Victoria Stevens, Palo Alto, CA internet is not the same as tv

—Stephen Mobilio, Levittown, NY

Didn't we stop this kind of crap back when Theodore Roosevelt was in office? You know, the whole "let's monopolize everything" crap? Thanks to the removal of Net Neutrality, you have removed that wall against ISPs, especially those who control the majority of internet infrastructure in small cities. This is unacceptable and is one of the many reasons why we are the laughingstock of this world.
—Josh Meza, El Paso, TX

This is classist bullshit. The internet gives people of all levels of economic status in our country access to self education, communication and free expression. You entitled assholes making this horror a reality won't be affected by it, you can afford internet. I would go on but I'm out of space.
—Sarah Bunn, Boulder, CO

The Internet is a valuable resource simply because of the wealth of knowledge and it's accesibility. Please don't take that away from individuals who learn so much from the internet and couldn't have done so before.
—, Nesconset, NY

If this happens its the start of what will be a police state world and if that happens people will revolt

WHY DOES AMERICA KEEP ACTING LIKE THEY OWN THE INTERNET JUST LEAVE IT ALONE
—Jennalaia, Medway, MA

Let the Internet be for the people!
—Britta Carson, Springfield, OH

Net Neutrality is far more important that any single group of people can fathom. So much of our current pop culture began here. If you allow the lobbyists of the ISPs to convince you in holding up this decision, you will kill the creativity of the people, you will throttle those whose livelihoods depend on running a small business through the internet. Do not kill Net Neutrality. Because doing so will kill the imaginations of millions
—Richard Jordan Nosowicz, Buffalo, NY

You better not fucking try this, government; dont you fucking dare.
—Skye Martinez, Los Angeles, CA

To kill ne Net Neutrality is to kill small businesses and creativity.
—Ryan Stong, Huntington Beach, CA

The US is behind when it comes to internet service as it is - the speeds we're offered are incredibly slow compared to the rest of the world. And it's ok to limit us more? Even pushing aside the gross implications for individuals, this makes no sense economically speaking. The "free market" doesn't work when the individual interests of the powerful outweigh the collective interests of the country --- as is so often stated when referring to government interference, the market WILL fight back.
—Leila Kadir, Tempe, AZ

Why take things that we pay for? Why are you people trying to take and take and take? This is utterly sickening and the people that want net neutrality gone are despicable.
—Ash, Buford, GA

We live in the United States of America. The internet is the media. Are we not entitled to free speech? This is simply unacceptable to make the internet a place for selective access based on funds. Is it not enough to pay companies for services? Restore internet neutrality
—Molly Copeland, Torrance, CA

This is very important to small businesses. They'll lose a lot of easy advertising if they can't pay for Internet, and their customers might not be able to/want to pay either.
—Rachel W, Norman, OK

THIS IS WRONG. THE ONE PLACE WHERE WE ARE FREE YOU WISH TO TAKE IT AWAY. SO MANYPEOPLE STRUGGLE IN THE OUTSIDE WORLD AND GO TO THE INTERNET. ITS OUR BLANKET, WHY SOME PEOPLE ARE STILL ALIVE TO THIS DAY. Do not control it.
—Kit Winter, Wasilla, AK

This is getting out of hand. first terrible health care, flooding in school debt and now this? Was it not the reason why so many folks from Europe come to now North America to free themselves from taxes and over pricing? Take action.

—Corrie Frank, West Plains, MO

Having to pay for using websites would affect people with not much money but who need them for work etc. also just websites in general, most people won't afford it anyway and I need the internet to stay kinda sane
—Amelia, ,

Limiting the internet for profit is a crime and you should be ashamed of yourselves. Did you forget what progress looked like? Did you forget that brilliant minds come from poverty? Did you forget that people, regardless of income, race, or persuasion were still people and the internet, as it stood before your verdict, was a means of connecting minds that were otherwise untouched? You do this and you break down the infrastructure of the current state of technology, art, literature, and creativity as a whole. Shame on you.
—Vanguard Black, Los Angeles, CA

You should be ashamed that this has to he pointed out to you.
—Marci Kolyvek, Seattle, WA

Seriously isn't this like the third or forth attempt at making the internet (a great place to express oneself) more restrictive? Why?

The internet should be kept as a level playing field for the benefit of the entire country. Anything less will cripple creativity, communication, and innovation in the United States.
—Laura Beggs, San Francisco, CA

I'M ALREADY PAYING FOR MY INTERNET SERVICES AND NOW YOU WANT ME TO PAY FOR WEBSITES????? ARE YOU KIDDING ME????
—Erron Madison Stevens, ,

As a journalist, I need to be able to access the webs fast. And I can't even begin to parse the ways this impinges my rights as a citizen. It would be a mistake to let any ISP charge for "fast lanes" to particular sites. Isn't unfair enough that people already have to pay for faster surfing speeds?
—Maria Torres, Stockbridge, GA

We need to stop thinking that the internet and television are one and the same and should be treated equally, because that is the farthest thing from the truth I have ever heard, and the people who do treat internet like television have obviously not delved deep into the world of either.

Internet prices are bad enough as it is. I'm already being throttled by Comcast, and these guys WILL jump the gun to censor the web for others. This is censorship. Who the hell is running our government, China? Is this America's Great Firewall?
—Aaron West, Tucson, AZ

This ruling is destructive to the minds of people everywhere. Broadband internet access, like any access to any server around the world, is telecommunications and should be treated as such; this way we get the necessary protections we require.

—Lexi Sanburg, Nashville, TN

Give our planet one thing we can use.
—David William Hanson, Los Angeles, CA

The idea of a corporation being able to control the speed at which I access content that I am not actually being charged for seems unnecessary and downright confusing, particularly in a day and age where most transactions for business require fast access to the Internet. There has to be a better way to go about doing this rather than letting a company like Verizon control this.
—Jacob Tyler Breithaupt, Sequim, WA

This is horrible. Not only does it limit civil rights and expressing them, it will violently segregate people and impact the economy negatively by hampering all the business happening through the internet.

The free internet is the greatest avenue of personal freedoms this country has left. Be American and keep the internet a medium of free speech.
—Prachi Goel, Saratoga, CA

This decision does not fully comprehend the extent of the impact it will have on users all over the globe, the pressure it will create internationally for people to use sites they need and want to use every day. Judges do not understand the internet. They should not be making rulings on subject matters they can't comprehend. It's dangerous and highly problematic for vulnerable groups of society that rely on using the internet for their businesses/ livelihoods, education, communication etc. and will not be able to afford the commericalisation of webites. This will polarise people's experience of the internet. It will politicise and commericalise our access to information, and will create a whole new set of inequalities.

As a student, this problem greatly concerns me. My education relies on my access to the internet, but with the loss of net neutrality, I worry about my future if my internet access is slowed or restricted. I can't afford to pay a fee to continue using the sites and services that I currently rely upon. Speaking for all students, this has the potential to severely damage our future, and it is unfair to remove something that we as a group have been forced to rely on for almost everything while we are also being driven into heavy debt just so we can have the possibility of a successful future. I urge you to consider this matter carefully.

Freedom of speech should not depend on money, with net neutrality the first amendment can be enjoyed by all from sea to shining sea
—Martin Long, ,

I am somewhat disappointed that this has come this far in America. I am planing to study for a phd in America next year and I feel that the internet is such a wondrous source of information that would otherwise be hard to come by. And what makes it beautiful is that that information, mostly, it's freely accessible by all. The loss of net neutrality will make it harder for sites to generate income from adverts and will ultimately result in more paid services across the board reducing the accessibility of the internet and thus what makes the internet a wondrous human achievement. I desperately hope that that won't happen but the first step to ensuring this is to reaffirm net neutrality.
—Jonathan Hughes, ,

The internet isn't like TV, it runs on usermade content. By removing ney neutrality, you are scaring off a lot of the users that make that content. The internet will stagnate and die. Don't let this happen.
—Andrew Parsons, Bristol,

Fuck the American Injustice System.
—James Saldana, Rancho Cucamonga, CA

First of all: don't we already have enough discrimination in this country? Just saying. Second of all: This seems like another way to help the rich people in this country get the best there is...just because they have money. It's unfair, and quite frankly I'm upset that this was even considered to be a viable option in the first place. Please help us keep the internet "free" as a telecommunications service. Stand up for the little guy! Use your authority to help make pretty much everyone happy. Don't let this gross manipulation of the lower (and even middle, let's be real) classes become the norm.

People who can't constantly pay for websites (i.e., me and other poor people) ought to be able to use the Internet without constantly having to pay for websites. Almost everything relies on Internet, nowadays, and a large portion of people are broke. As a college student, this kind of thing worries me. I am constantly on the internet not just for fun but also for school. I have things like ClassWeb to register for classes, BlackBoard to do assignments on, and specialized sites that my school is connected to that give me homework and tests, like McGraw Hill. To limit me and force me to pay for more just so I can function as a student is cruel and unusual punishment for not having enough money. The internet service providers should not be able to hold sway over my grades. If I am to become the kind of citizen that can fully participate, I need to be able to do things like do homework or apply for a job without having to constantly give money I don't have or could use for things like food or rent. This is one hundred percent unconstitutional. The United States can start saying goodbye to freedom, because this is the beginning of a terrible path. The open and accessible nature of the internet is what makes it such a necessity to keep it as such. No other place can people seek out information just for the sake of gaining knowledge than the internet. Without that accessiblity it makes the whole point moot and that would be a true waste of it's potential. Don't let what makes business sense go against what makes common sense. Let people access information no matter what, simply because the pursuit of knowledge is one of humanities greatest strengths.

A decent portion of my money goes to IVs, injections, doctor's appointments, etc. The internet is my only real way of making friends, communicating, or doing anything fun; especially during the times I feel so sick I can barely move. If net neutrality is lost then websites will be able to charge us more just to use them; something I literally can't afford, and something that may make it so I can barely communicate with those who help me when I'm doing worst.

To deny us access to certain sites sounds more like the government's continued control over education. College is already putting people in the poor house, but no one wants to forgive the debt. I am not happy to hear about this at all. If the cable companies go through with blocking, slowing sites and creating fast lanes and additional tiers/paywalls, ontol of the already hefty fee, i would rather not pay them at all. If these companies expect the patronage of such a large amount of people (and companies, gaming giants like Microsoft, Sony and Valve will suffer too), they need to keep the internet as is.

In addition to the comments in the above form letter, I would like to point out how crippling non-neutrality will be to countries outside of the United States. In New Zealand our internet is already slow and often plagued by localization issues, even when we try and follow every rule set out. By allowing this Non-Neutral stance, you have practically guaranteed that we will be locked out of any discussion of new media, let alone be able to take part and contribute to the wonders of the world. In allowing this Non-Neutral position, you have given ISPs control over the way any individual wishes to express themselves through allowing them to limit that persons' access to public spaces such as twitter and facebook. This may not seem true now, but given the popularity of such sites, there is no doubt in my mind that those will quickly be cordoned off into "deluxe" internet packages, relegating them solely to the rich and powerful. Whereas under Neutrality anyone with an internet connection and an email can put their word out for anyone who cares. Please, I beg of you, as someone who knows they will suffer and be exploited by companies who do not even care that her country exists... please rethink your decision that the internet does not need to be neutral.

I dunno about you, but I'd rather not have to pay extra to my ISP to be able to send my friend a message on skype, when that's my only communication option. Since, y'know, phones are expensive.
—Mac, College Place, WA

Even though I am Brititsh and this may be an American court hearing, the ramifications of killing net neutrality will not only apply nationally but globally. In this case, the FCC has proved once again that it views the rights and agendas of corporations as being superior to those of American citizens. There is no two ways about this, no counter argument, killing net neutrality actively corrupts the internet, once again in America's (and by extension the world's) history, handing over power from the many to the few, the few who can afford to extensively lobby Washington into undertaking action directly opposed the national, international, and moral interest.

The Internet is not a consumer service anymore, it is a utility that everyone is required to use. Access to the internet means access to government services, access to important information both locally and globally, access to job markets, access to consumer markets, access to professional and personal support. What ISP customers choose to do with the internet connections they pay for is their own to make. The internet has become most people's lines for communication, everyone from local businesses to hospitals like Sanford use the internet provided (in many cases by the only choice in the area) by the companies who would be able to put a strangle hold on who ever and what ever company they want, and they've been shown to use that power already. Without net neutrality our economy is sure to take a large hit, not to mention the censorship, and constitutional issues that would be sure to arise. Egypt had an issue not too long ago, that I'm sure we all remember, and their government, and companies tried to censor the same way, do we want to do the same, or are we the free country we are led to believe? I believe that America can still be the place of freedom it once was, this is a perfect small step to becoming that again.

Net Neutrality is a must--allowing ISPs to discriminate or give favor to those with the big bucks will be a serious blow to many people. Not just in their personal lives, but it will be potentially devastating to small businesses and freelancers alike as big corporations will be able to afford the best services while everybody else is left struggling to find a way to make their content accessible the way it used to be.

I don't have much money, i'm not got at interacting with stranger and i love to learn new things. The internet as it is (free and equal) is my one gateway to socialize and learn without pressure and without having to pay more than i can afford. I never understood with it was so important to separate everyone and make people afraid of others by taking away their means to understand what is different, but this is exactly what it will be doing by stopping us from interacting with people different than us in the ways we choose. America keeps yelling about freedom. Maybe it would be this it acted on it instead on wanting to make a profit out of it.

This could mean the downfall of many small businesses. No more access and ways to gain and share information. This not only makes it harder to gain free information, but also limits it for only those who have the money. In developing countries, information is crucial for the communities to grow. Take away or limit access to the biggest media of free speech, and we will slow down every aspect of civilisation. Kickstarters will never gain supporters, as most donations isn´t local, but spread across the globe. Social medias wont reach as many. And people will have to find other means to report and follow what is happening around the world. This is crucial, as we know the media ever give us the whole picture of events. We NEED the web too be free for all. So that democracy still is first priority.

—Lilly, Big Rapids, MI

Ending Net Neutrality is one of the dumbest things you can do. In how many more ways must the average and poor suffer while the wealthy get a pass? In how many more ways must the average person watch as the things they are allowed are stripped away and placed in the hands of the rich? The internet makes up a large part of our society and economy. Do you really think forcing people to pay to access specific sites is going to gain you any business? As someone from the lower class who can barely afford internet as it is, but relies on it to complete a college degree, I can assert that I will not ever pay extra to access things I always used to. I will not pay extra just to complete a homework assignment. I will not pay extra for any reason. With all of the garbage being tossed around on Capital Hill, and I do mean garbage, this nation is starting to feel a whole lot more communist and socialist than the Democratic Republic that it boasts and claims to be. No wonder so many citizens are leaving.

The internet has become a place where people not only do research for school, but also do business. How does this help the American people to limit what information they can have access to, or how many people they can reach for their business? Not everyone has the money to pay through the nose for reasonable access to every site
—Pat McCauley, Iowa City, IA

In a world that is becoming more and more dependent on the Internet, a guarantee that Internet access will be unfettered, equal and universal will be needed to maintain economical and social equality. Just like telephone services before it, broadband Internet access has to be treated like a communications service and not a luxury.

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY FOR ALL.
—Nathalie, Bethesda, MD

I think that it is totally unnaceptable to put restraints and laws on the internet because that will fully affect people's freedoms on what and how they use the internet
—Phil, ,

Please don't let cable companies extort me. They already use business numbers for the data speeds I'm supposed to get, but rarely do. Don't let the ISPs do the government's job.
—Derrike Garbart, Saint Petersburg, FL

I will not stand for suc blatent disregard of the international freedom that the Internet has given us. Just like space, it crosses too many borders for any one nation to direct it. Only those who reside "within" it should be capable of such decisions.
—Mark Garner, Bushwood, MD

This verdict is fucking dumb.
—Jacob, New York, NY

Please don't allow companies to limit access to websites! We need Neutrality!
—, Clarksville, TN

This is not ok
—Cole Peyton, Brookville, OH

The internet was meant to be a free, open place for us, and you want to take that away. Please rethink your decision.
—Derek Johnson, Sierra Vista, AZ

The internet should be a free place for people to enjoy. We already pay for access. Why should we have to pay more for the same access?
—Ches Lapeza, Cordele, GA

The internet is one of the places we can openly express our 1st ammendment from the comfort and safety of our homes. Yes sometimes bad things happen with its use but that's honestly the pot calling the kettle black. There are various examples of those who claim to protect us go and do the opposite. The internet is a place for release, education, and connection to others. Loosing that neutrality will be seriously cumbersome to all. I can assure you that while the government rules that the common man must pay extra for certain sites, those of the government: their members, establishments, work. Will be free of these charges.
—aleen Sanchez, Miami, FL

This is disgusting. The internet needs to be 100% neutral, without goverment control. This world is slowly becoming Orwell's 1984.

Are we really such a capitalistic and greedy country, that we are going to charge for something that is free around the world?
—Phillip Allard, Pasadena, TX

Please stop trying to break net neutrality
—Jeff kachoris, Buda, TX

THIS IS NOT COOL, AND I WILL NOT STAND FOR IT. Not everything has to be about god damn money! Grow a brain you idiots! The internet is a free zone and we want it free of your grubby, greedy hands!
—Corex McD, ,

It doesn't matter what country I live in, the Internet must stay neutral.
—Crash, ,

This is isn't okay, A lot of people even schools use the Internet for it Assessability, Our economy sucks as it is why you been all this time on the Internet instead of fixing what's already broken. Put in the lives of college students schools even freelance workers at risk of choosing between paying for the package or groceries
—Isabella hubbard, Dallas, TX

Stop being so freaking greedy for money.
—Bee, Beverly Hills, CA

Seriously, this is a very bad thing. Internet service providers will lose huge profits in the long run because this will completely shut down the internet.

—Johnny Currency, Memphis, TN

Don't touch the internet.
—Maibrit Josenius Hammer, ,

It's stealing for them to take a website that someone else made and charge their viewers without their consent. Both Internet users and producers are being robbed by a third party! That would be like someone charging you for shopping carts. Standard pricing you can shop in aisles 1-4, but you have to carry everything by hand! Special price with get you aisles 2-6 and a basket. Premium is the whole store in a cart. Doesn't sound good does it? Now imagine if the Wal-Mart didn't want it either but the government passed legislation making it possible? That's an un-American violations of rights.
—Troy Grilli, Ocoee, FL

—Jake Knowlton, Girard, OH

I'm an American expat and I'm constantly ashamed of our country. I'm so proud of America for trying to capitilize on freedom. That's the true American dream, right there.
—River Ferris, ,

This is horrible, and disgusting. I've always used the internet as a way to learn and play for free. This is just wrong, I don't understand why your sympathizing with already multimillion dollar companies, the internet is supposed to be neutral and we shouldn't have to pay for it! It's for EVERYONE, not just those who can pay. It's vital that you start treating the internet like the communication service I've known it to be and restore met neutrality.
—, Austin, TX

WE WANT NET NEUTRALITY! US THE PEOPLE OF THE INTERNET! WE WANT A FAIR AND EQUAL INTERNET! NET NEUTRALITY MAKES SURE THAT ALL CONTENT CREATERS ARE EQUAL! WITHOUT IT YOU WILL DESTROY CREATIVITY AND PROGRESS! IF THE PERSON INVENTING THE NEXT FACEBOOK CANT AFFORD TO PUT THEIR PRODUCT IN THE SO CALLED " FAST LANE" THEN HOW ARE THEY GOING TO GET PEOPLE ON THEIR WEBSITE! THE CABLE COMPANIES WONT MAKE IT SO THE FAST LANE IS SUPER FAST AND THE REGUAL LANE IS NORMAL! THEY WILL MAKE THE FAST LANE NORMAL AND THE REGULAR LANE REALLY REALLY SLOW! CABLE COMPANIES ARE CORRUPT AS FUCK DONT GIVE THEM ANYMORE POWER
—Isaac Hurford, Cedar Rapids, IA

The internet should remain a neutral place where even those of the lowest income are able to access information and stay in touch withbothers. I'm already struggling to buy groceries as it is and I need internet access for educational, social, and personal reasons. That is why being forced to pay more than I can already barely manage; isn't fair or just.
—Sevilla Martinez, Albuquerque, NM

This is so many levels of wrong. Asking people to pay to get proper internet access will destroy on rod the few creative mediums around —Tara Huntingford, ,

This is unnecessary and ridiculous.
—Micah Orth, Shelby, NC

Please please please
—Kaylee Cleaver, Pueblo, CO

The internet should not be payed for a run like a cable company. We shouldn't have to pay to get faster access to certain websites. This puts traffic to my website at risk and I rely on my website for contacting businesses so I can get freelance work.
—Michelle Moniz, ,

This will make the internet less equal. This is just a way for the cable companies to become even more of a Monopoly.
—Jennifer Levitz, Raleigh, NC

"Right now there is no one protecting Internet users from ISPs that block or discriminate against websites, applications or services. Companies like Verizon will now be able to block or slow down any website, application or service they like. And they'll be able to create tiered pricing structures with fast lanes for those who can afford the tolls and slow lanes for everyone else." :(Poor people should have internet too.

You better not take away my fucking internet(my life) just because you sons/daughters of britches/mangoes want more fucking money. Stop wasting tax dollars on stupid shit and maybe you'd have money. You might even be able to fucking fix this economy and environment. Now this bad ass 15 year old girl has only one thing left to say: Get the god damn stick out of your ass and let us have something that we don't have to pay you for. Assholes. P.s I am well aware that it says mangoes instead of what I was trying to say which was MANWHORES. But I'm funny so you can suck a dick.

Please honor the freedoms we are given in our consitution. Everything cannot be about profit for corporations. Your citizens deserve benefits of their citizenship. This is one of them.
—Genevieve Killion, Beaverton, OR

The internet is how I'm able to talk with a girl from Sweden about her amazing story ideas and how best to write them. We are able to share tips and suggestions, encouragement and praise. We're coaching each other from across the ocean. And yet, internet providers like Version would dare to discourage that human interaction, that connectivity, because they want to make MORE money--money I can't afford to pay with the job I currently have. How is this fair? How is this serving the American people? How can doing something like this, positively affect people like me and my friend who lives outside of this country? Please, reconsider all that an open internet allows us, as human beings, to experience, to communicate, and to accomplish. Thank you.
—Krista Weiser, Suncook, NH

I pay enough for internet access as it is and as a graduate student you know it's hitting my pockets deep. I don't need the added irritation of paying extra just to find articles for review for my thesis after already paying ridiculous amounts just to have the opportunity to conduct my research! This country should be focusing on the happiness and wellbeing of its people. Not how they can scrape every penny out from under us.

The internet is the last place, the last horizon, where the people are all honestly equal. Net Neutrality allows this. Removing Net Neutrality, may lead to something very bad and very dark for our country, and the future of freedom.
—Clayton Stovall, Atlanta, TX

You shouldn't do this. It's so freakin stupid!
—Brittani Rombach, Haskell, OK

This is harmful to small businesses, freelancers, students, and depending on how this is used in conjunction with Citizens United, quite possibly the fair and open democratic governance of our country.
—Catherine J. Hutchins, Chicago, IL

Land of the free? More like land of the fees. Companies control too much of our lives already, giving them control over the internet like this is appalling.
—Ruksana, Marysville, OH

Is this an actual thing that's happening? Do I genuinely have to sign a petition to stop this from happening? Upsetting.
—Megan Hopp, Kennewick, WA

Why is this even thought of as a good idea?

This would greatly affect my income as a large portion of what I earn is through business interactions on the Internet. With the loss of net neutrality, I lose the ability to easily and efficiently contact my clients and they lose the ability to even find my works. This is a huge hit to both my business and my general lifestyle.
—F H., Lake Villa, IL

If the US wants to stand by its claims that it is pro small business, then net neutrality is a must! No one should be priced out of an equalizing market.

—Chris Tim, ,

Net Neutrality is important, without it it really prevents the small guy able to start a business, it gives those with little to no money any chance to progress in this world! Without the internet a lot of the knowledge I have today would not have been gained! Net neutrality is needed.
—Peter Gregroy, ,

The internet should be treated as a public service. It has been so deeply ingrained in our lives that it is almost necessary for everyone to have unlimited access to this recourse. The decision in the Verizon case will have grave consequences across america, where we already pay more for a worse service that people in European countries pay.

—Gabrielle leyba, Albuquerque, NM

The Internet should not be tiered, but an open and even access to all information regardless of the content. I can see why prioritizing websites would seem efficient to communication companies, but escalation of this action is a factor not worth indulging.
—Julio Morin, Oklahoma City, OK

This is ridiculous. Who even came up with this idea?!

To not consider a thing like broadband as part of telecommunications is rather odd being that it is essentially the future of telecommunications itself.
—Samuel Odiakosa, Moreno Valley, CA

protect citizens rights to the airwaves. Don't let our freedom to communication belong to a business.
—Beth Davis, Clearwater, FL

Please reconsider the decision on Net Neutrality. It is vital to retain a free market for data/information. Restraining content may help gain control of some sort, but it will also play a part in halting progress in this infinity of positive potential. If history stands as any testament, I imagine this could lead to the transformation of the internet into a virtual Great Depression of sorts--where the elite few have the vast majority power and resources, leaving little for the rest. Please help preserve what may be the final frontier of freedom and innovation in the digital age.

This is the end of the internet as we know it. Why should we have to pay for sites that are purely entertainment, not to mention sites like Netflix where majority of us already pay for the membership alone?
—Caitlyn Willis, Deltona, FL

What Americans do with their time is not up to an internet provider's views on what people should be doing. If I have to pay for internet service, I should be able to view what I want to view, use what applications I wish. This is sickeningly like the Hobby Lobby issue. Just because a person runs a company, does not mean they get to decide what everyone else has access to.
—Serena Fairchild, Nampa, ID

You might not think this is so, but this affects all of us.
—Elly Elago, ,

It's always about money, greed & power!
—Annette Johnson, Bernardston, MA

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

—Rian Croteau, Syracuse, NY

Net neutrality needs to be in place. By ISP providers throttling the service they provide to its customers, one could say it hinders public speech on one of our largest communication systems. The internet is more than just watching and sharing cat videos. I found this website since the internet is still open. If net neutrality were not in place, one day my service could be heavily throttled by ISP companies when I try to visit websites they do not want its customers to be visiting and cover it up by stating "We are not disallowing our customers to visit these websites, but due to the data usage, the customer needs to pay more." This sort of logic could also lead ISP companies to herd their customers into buying expensive packages, essentially becoming monopolies of specific regions of the web. I'm sure ISP companies are not hurting for money, but they want to bleed their customers dry of every penny possible.
—Renee Gilliard, Fort Lauderdale, FL

RESTORE NET NUTRALITY!!! The Internet is one of the greatest inventions of our time because everyone is the same on it. People making a website for their new business start in the same place as a major corporation does. The President's Twitter account starts out with the same number of followers as mine did. The beauty of how the Internet works is that everybody has to work to be successful or "Internet famous" or whatever. The internet is the closest thing we have representing the definition of the American Dream. The American Dream has never been, "I'll be successful and rich and famous." The American Dream is: "If I want to be successful and rich and famous, I can, because I have the same shot as everyone else because we are all starting at the same spot." We don't exactly have that anywhere else in America, but on the Internet we do. And that's the beauty and necessity of Net Neutrality. If you take it away, you are attacking the American Dream.

If education is too expensive to access and then the only other massively consumed method of learning is restricted then how will our lesser privileged citizens be able to rise up to something more. The Internet is a source of learning, buisness, socialization, and comfort for a vast majority of people and an even great percent of poor people. To remove net neutrality is to tell those born without a golden spoon in their mouth to know their place and never strive for more.
—Kevin macedo, Waltham, MA

It's a shame that you don't really realize exactly what this means, and I have a feeling you'll be far too entrenched to change once you get to the point. A lot of things can fly over the heads of the American citizens. We see it happen all the time. But when you start attacking part of their everyday life, then people start to notice because it doesn't. go. away. The Internet needs to be free. If it isn't, we lose a vital portion of our abilities to freedom of speech/expression, and the ability to assemble and discuss complex issues over a larger span. Maybe you get kickbacks that will mitigate this damage to you personally, but will it be enough? For your sake I hope it is, because I sincerely doubt that you'll be completely happy with this action once you see its full ramifications. I beg you to consider future generations. Our society is based around information and its exchange. The Internet is undeniably the single most powerful piece of technology at this time. There is no good reason why any number of companies should have direct control over it. Hopefully this is an issue people will actually stand up for once they realize how much it means. And when they do, those companies and the FCC will have hell to pay for this ruling. This is the whole POINT of the FCC. The reason it can assert this much power in this issue is because it was MEANT to. If you don't take action here, then you're denying the very reason for this agency's existence. There's a lot of dead-weight in the government, but I never would have expected that the FCC would be part of it. Thank you for your time, and I strongly urge you to reconsider. This is a far-reaching issue. Take a step back and see how much influence this has. Sincerely, Neal Kuster

This is a chance to take a stand on something that deeply affects how we interact with people internationally. I was lucky to meet many friends online and while travelling. Such a decision might kill development. Many of the biggest and most important companies since the beginning of the 2000's only grew because of the internet as a platform for inovation and exchange of ideas. Please don't kill the internet!

The internet as of right now is, for some, their only source of income. If they can't get a job, they work as freelance artists or content producers and hopefully are sponsored or get commissions. Having to pay to access certain sites not only adds an expense for these people who are already most likely short on money, but also limits their audience and the potential of getting a buyer/sponsor because there will be people who won't be willing to pay for access to a website.

Not only is this going to kill a lot of small businesses centered around free access to the internet allowing them access to their clients, due to providers charging premiums for speed and accessibility, it's also going to affect people outside the United States in a huge way. I don't think the FCC should allow such a decision to stand at the behest of the lobbying of cable companies, when it will effect the populations outside of its jurisdiction so strongly. This is a bigger decision than America, and the rest of the world would appreciate it if you'd treat it as such.

Seriously what these large ISPs are doing is illegal, it's extortion and monopolizing if a service. This is in fact illegal, the reason it's not seen as such is due to the fact that there are multiple ISPs, but when these ISPs go and agree on what territory they set themselves up in, it becomes the same thing as to competing gangs/mafia families agreeing where their territories lay and making a truce. This is illegal.

As a student, my access to information is going to be limited based on what my school will be able to afford. It feels inherently wrong that companies like Verizon are going to dictate what I'll have access to based on how much I or my school can afford to pay. Not only will I have limited access to information that should be free, but some avenues of free communication will be lost to me. I live on campus, away from my family- I use the internet to stay in touch with my friends and loved ones. Please. Please reconsider the FCC's decision on this matter.

I truly believe this is a blow to civil liberties of every citizen, and indirectly, if not directly, retards social progress. Striping the internet of its net neutrality is tantamount to hobbling the rights of citizens. How different is it to perpetuate such inequality in a free country than the blatant limitations of internet usage in countries like China? Is it morally and ethically justifiable b/c it is cost that limits our rights rather than laws? Please for once help put people before profits and treat broadband like a communication service, and restore its Net Neutrality rules. Thank you.
—Sultan Stewart, Washington, DC

Please strike down the decision from the appeals court and protect Internet consumers from being even further controlled by our Internet service providers. YOU will also be impacted economically and fiscally as it will impact you, your family, your colleagues, and your friends. Maybe you will be able to afford the new pricing, but there are many in our country who cannot. This is a form of fiscal discrimination against Americans. Please take proper action to stop this from happening. Thank you very much!
—Christina Shinn, Alexandria, VA

Internet should not be classified in the same way as cable television. That does not make sense. It is a means of communication. Would you allow the post office to stop delivering mail to certain addresses or to charge consumers more for delivery to a particular address (apart from weight)?
—Venus Rachal, Inglewood, CA

In the economy here; cash is already strapped as it is. You bet companies would suck the ever living life out of misc. art sites. I don't want it to ever come down to me choosing between groceries or purchasing a new tier package via comcast to be able to access tumblr or DeviantArt (let alone not guaranteeing I'll even be seen by my customer base since they may not want to pay out their wallets either). It doesn't seem important to most, but I do 90% of my business online entirely. While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly horrifying. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Maxwell Fisher, Granite Bay, CA

the fact that people in power think it's alright to take away access to one of the only free ports to unlimited information and distractions from everyday life unless we pay them MORE than we already do for basic internet access is sickening. how fucking greedy can you be????
—Shannon Smith, Norristown, PA

The internet is basically the reason I do decent in school. I'm sure I'm not the only one. It would really suck if I had to pay to access Wikipedia.

—Jean Calderone, Brooklyn, NY

Television is dead for a reason. Don't kill the internet too.
—Aimiee, Beverly Hills, CA

I'm getting sick and tired of you Americans attempting to own everything as if you're STILL on the European conquest to rule fucking everything. ISP's are providing a service to their customers, but now you are giving ISP's the ability to decide what their customers want as opposed to the customer deciding what they want. That's a huge ethical misstep that needs to be rethought. If this is thought as a way to prevent online piracy, then here's a different thought for you: nothing can stop it. People pirate things because they don't have the means to buy it anyways. I personally pirate quite a few video games, music albums, and sometimes movies with the full intention of giving the creators my money if I feel they've done a deserving job. If I like something I play, listen to, or watch, I will make sure to buy as much merchandise as I feel makes up for not paying to watch it up front. For instance, because I liked Pulp Fiction, I bought a couple Bad Mother Fucker wallets from BMFWallets.com, which is an officially licensed seller of said products. I've also purchased the DVD. I've effectively spent more than triple what a movie ticket would have cost by doing so. In truth, to fix piracy you need to make the citizens of America feel confident in spending their money. Killing Net Neutrality allows ISPs to charge their clients even more than they do now, and makes the middle class' wallets even tighter than they already were anyways. This is the exact opposite of what a capitalist economy should do; it should never take advantage of the customer to the point where the customers are trying not to spend as much money. As soon as that happens, the economy crashes hard, and it might not be recoverable.

—, Sugar Land, TX

It is an incredibly bad idea to force companies to be charged by internet providers for the use of the internet. Consider how many people do not have internet access of their own and must go to libraries, schools and other public facilities to gain access to the internet, which is an incredibly vital part of our society today. If websites are forced to pay for faster internet, that completely upends the playing field. It's bad enough that Internet Service Providers charge incredible amounts for basic service, but to charge websites as well is absolutely ludicrous.
—Ann Marie Manso, Lake Hiawatha, NJ allowing the death of net neutrality would be a disgusting violation of the american people's interest, and would make me and many others I know very disappointed in our leadership

—Peter Kaminski Frankel, Hastings on Hudson, NY

The internet is not broken and it does not need to be fixed. I understand that regulations are desired and that the functionality of the internet could be improved, but killing net neutrality is not the answer. The internet thrives the way that it works now -- without the threat of ISPs allowing a "fast lane" for people that can pay -- and changing it in this way would grossly inhibit an incredible amount of people's ability to create freely and productively. The way the internet works now encourages people to innovate in endlessly surprising ways, and this would mean the downfall of that innovation, which would only slow society down as a whole. I hope you take action to prevent this. Thank you for listening; I don't envy your position in this.

It's appalling to think our government would rather support big business and step on the very people that put them into office, instead of listening to the voice of the people. We don't want to have to pay MORE for a service that is already over priced. For many, this is how we network with friends and family and more then that, it's how we make our living. Net Neutrality is important.

—Jennifer Robbins, Franklin, MA

As a freelance artist and web-comic artist, net neutrality is what allows my job to exist. Without net neutrality, the free culture of the internet that has fostered this amazing community of creators and consumers will collapse. The fact that we can so easily share our content without fronting more money for "faster" service (or in reality, so our service/access is not SLOW) is what allows people like me who do not have a lot of capital to build an audience and allows that audience to easily access what we're making. These are REAL JOBS held by REAL PEOPLE who depend on this income to live. Many people make their living on the internet in a completely legitimate way, providing services and goods that "real life" stores do not. The freedom of the internet and net neutrality are what makes this possible. Don't take these great opportunities for growth and community away from us.

We've already paid for the infrastructure upgrades. Forcing is to pay more and more, changing the structure to mimic television (which thousands are abandoning every day), is a blatant attempt to dig more money out of the pockets of the citizens of this country. We've already given as much as we can. Tell these corporate vultures to look elsewhere for money--the mine of the masses is dry.

—Scarlet, Purvis, MS

Whatever happened to freedom?
—Derek Gross, Morocco, IN

Ridiculous and unjust. The web should be accessible to all, not just to the few who pay up for it. This is throwing people with less privilege under the bus simply to stuff pockets.
—Jordan Dorsey, Sioux Falls, SD

Don't go off saying, "Well, if you can't pay for it then you shouldn't have it" because it's no ones fault but FCC's. The internet, the websites, are free. No one should have to pay to go on Facebook, Google, Youtube, etc. It's ridiculous. All they want is to put a money sign on something that doesn't need it. Greedy pricks.
—Ridley Shay, South Richmond Hill, NY

NO. This has to stop. They have to stop policing us. Money is tight as it is in this world, and they want to charge us to access free websites and information? No. We already pay to use the internet, stop trying to steal every cent possible.

What the actual Fuck, FCC. After this much backlash, you still vote to kill net neutrality. Please, start treating broadband like a communications service. Please restore Net Neutrality rules. More importantly, please call for Tom Wheeler's resignation.
—Edward He, Livingston, NJ

I am a university student paying for text books, tuition, room and board, and now I have to worry about being able to afford internet?? This is the most ridiculous and ill-thought proposition.
—Maritza Pineda, Chicago, IL

I'd like to point out that we, as citizens, already have to pay a good amount to get internet! It's absolutely outrages me to think that the government, yet again, is using this as a scam to get more money out of people's pockets!!! We shouldn't have to pay more for certain sites. The whole internet price should cover all the expenses for the sites rather paying an additional amount per site.

what the hell was the point of me paying for faster internet service, if I have to pay them more just to speed it up?!
—Jackie Lo, Oakland, CA

This is the same as me driving a Kia and "Somebody", not mentioning any names Verizon, driving a Dodge. We are both at the highway toll and should receive the same rate but some greedy bastards with big ole dicks in a room full of big ole dicks are cackling about how smart and big their dicks are think they should be able to discriminate against anyone that isn't for them. Equally it's like going into a restaurant and paying with a chase card and the same big dick owners charging a fee just because you don't bank at the same place they do.
—andrew Kennedy, Huntington, WV

Why would anyone want this?
—Jane Austin, Tacoma, WA

By killing net neuratlity you'll be making internet usage more diffcult for everyone. Restoring net neurality is the only logical answer.
—Angel Perez, New York, NY

This policy has the potential of not only limiting people's ability to collaborate to create innovative progress through technology, but it opens the doors to a whole new level of class discrimination. Those without much money will now be blocked from vital learning tools that they need in order to succeed in the world. People will no longer be able to search important information that could be life saving. This is a blunder of incredible proportions. People rely on the free and open structure of the internet to communicate, learn, and connect with the world. Limiting this will limit the abilities of an entire population to achieve it's fullest potential. Please, think about what affects this will have on society.
—Drew Tessier, Fayetteville, NY

holy shit NOOOOOOOOOOOOO
—Mark Kristan, ,

The internet is a place of freedoms. Freedom to information, freedom to express ones self and the freedom to create a name for ones self. To stop this is like deciding that the American people no longer need a constitution. If this isn't changed this will hurt out future as engineers and free thinkers, the rest of the world will continue to move ahead with new inventions and ideas. While we sit in the dark letting large companies benefit. Do you want us to turn into china? Syria? Or do you want this to be America where we can show the world how amazing our minds are and blow away the compition with our freedoms.
—Ashley valle, Victoria, TX

As the internet has grown, it has become akin to public utilities - a necessity to run businesses, communicate, or navigate around someone's home city. Please don't let coroporate giants rule something that should be equally shared, no matter how much someone makes.
—Desiree Kern, Kinston, NC literally nobody outside of the internet company's paychecks wants this to happen

—Chris C, ,

Please make sure net neutrality remains. I am so tired of my country becoming a corporatocracy while the majority get left behind. America should be about innovation and dreams, which won't happen if only the billionaire companies take control of the internet and leave all the small to medium sites behind. Please do not take the internet away from us. It is a necessity now, not a luxury.

—Ryan Overturf, Saint Paul, MN

It's sickening how they are trying to rip our freedoms from us one by one.
—Jennifer Kowalczyk, Melbourne, FL

Making people pay for access to certain sites or discriminating against certain websites/applications etc is against the ethos that created that internet as a free repository of shared information, and classist. So many internet businesses could be strangled and destroyed if the people aren't there to use them so it will be bad for the world's economy.
—Kylie Boddy, ,

This is absolutely absurd, the internet should be used for whoever and whatever it is needed for. What if someone needed to use the internet but they didn't have the money to pay for what ever they needed to access? Honestly, this is ridiculous.
—Alexis Mitchell, Stoneville, NC

Net neutrality directly influences the livelihood of small business owners who's primary transactions are over the internet in order to reach their customers. This means the fall of net neutrality is not helping people. Its harming them.
—Delia, Morgantown, WV

The attempts to stake financial claims in something referred to as the World Wide Web is extremely selfish on behalf of the companies that would profit, and the government letting them destroy a long standing symbol for connection and equality. Not everybody has direct resources to it, but my god, everyone has access to the internet in some way, shape, or form. Don't take that away.

I really love the internet and I hope the FCC restores Net Neutrality.
—Emma Bush, Madison, AL

I am loss for words over your decision. What you have done was, for you, at least, a practical and rewarding decision. Consequences be damned. 'Perhaps, it wasn't exactly what vast majority wanted' you may think now 'but in the end, all's well that ends well.' Except it isn't. You, the Federal Communications Commission, a supposedly unbiased and independent agency, has - and pardon my phrasing here - almost literally BENT OVER for lobbyists, and took a big one - you didn't make your own decision, you made THEIRS. We came to you without violence, hoping to convince you with reasoning rather than money or a gun to the head. Just people, and quite a few of them, ASKING you to stand up for us, for everyone, and keep the world's largest source of free information, innovation and entertainment safe from company interest. To provide an equal chance for everyone to use it, without obstacles posed by private companies. And for those who intended to start a business, to have a chance of success equal to those already in the field. You were supposed to protect US, ALL OF US, from potential dangers out there, ranging from malicious content on the net, to the same, exact form of expropriation of freedom that you just allowed to happen. Aside from potentially letting loose a mass, business-suit wearing "censorship demon" that is beyond EVEN YOUR control, you also just basically supported cronyism, a malformation of a supposedly free market, which is, indirectly, what this organization of yours is supposed to maintain. A malformation, that, in turn, may serve as a call for rebellion, or even a revolution. I'm not trying to threaten you. I'm not in the position, nor do I have the intention to do so. I am merely warning you, that you've made a mistake, and this time, it's a serious one. This case has been getting a lot of attention, TOO MUCH for nearly all sides included, except for us, the ones who had been asking you to change your mind about the subject. Now we ask you, once more, to reconsider your decision. No matter how much money they promised you, or already gave you (and we KNOW by now, that they did), it will be nothing compared to what ALL OF US will loose - you guys included! Make a stand, and we assure you, thousands, even millions will stand by you. We may not be able to pay you as generously, but the action that you will take will be rewarding in ways money cannot be, a reward in it's own. Tim Berners-Lee didn't create the Internet to line his pockets, and he never allowed it to be privatised, and for a good reason: the World Wide Web is our greatest form of communication yet, allowing us to share and distribute information at a scale, speed and range like never before. Slowing it, or obstructing it, making it into the tool of big business, would effectively set the world back by a good 50 or 60 years in time, where all we had regarding each other were assumptions and paranoia. The economy would probably suffer another, smaller crisis, and the public, and, quite possibly, political backlash that YOU'LL get for it would be devastating for your organization. In the face of this grisly outcome, we implore you, and I, the writer of this letter, personally ask you, to reconsider your decision and change the verdict. It's not an order, or a demand, we are all merely asking for your better judgement. But in the end, the decision is entire up to you. P.S.: And with all fairness, it's due time for the lobbyist to bend over for once.

—Christopher Gillingham, Seattle, WA

To kill net neutrality is to increase inequality, penalize the middle class, and hinder small businesses and American companies. Corporations should not decide what Americans want--and Americans have shown that they are against the FCC's decision that cable companies and ISPs can make arbitrary charges. The internet has been a successful equalizer and allowed greater opportunity for more people. Destroying net neutrality ruins the free internet and benefits only the most rich in our society. Stop letting our government be bought. Stop deciding the fate of the majority on the whims of a few.
—Timothy Rooney, Riverton, NJ

To take away net neutrality and limit internet freedom so that only the few who can pay extra is a direct violation of our right to freedom of speech. Please consider the people who need the internet daily and might not be able to afford hte "fast lanes" such as college students, small businesses, and people who use the internet to find jobs. America does not need more people in the government who will only listen to big business but to the people.

The FCC, a US organisation, does not have the authority to implement changes to such a global service. This is not how law works. The internet does not belong to the US, or indeed ISPs.
—Peter James Griffiths, ,

Seriously what the hell American Government? You have no right to be making such big decisions about things that do not only impact your own country but also impact the global community at large. Not only that but with the instillation of fast and slow lanes in the internet not only will commercial traffic be affected. What about charities? I'm not talking about big charities that have sway and might be able to access the fast lanes because they have pull. I'm talking about small community groups that make massive small differences in people's lives. Like delivering food to seniors and providing shelter to women and youth in crisis. These people are not going to be able to pay for premium internet service when they need every resource. But without an easily accessed internet site, that hungry old lady might not learn that there is a meals on wheels program she qualifies for, and the abused wife might not realize there is a safe place for her to escape to. Your country is supposed to be based on equality, and now you have found a way to segregate one of the great equalizing forces of the modern world. Slow clap.

As a human being, as a french person, i won't accept the internet freedom of the world from being taken by a bunch of groppy old men, i won't accept that my land, home of freedom and human rights, soiled too much by barbary, will be put down by 70-something men, this thing is o net regulation shit, it's a supereconomical weapon, capable of blocking an entire country worth of website, capable to tell you you should go on youtube and not on some new platform, capable of gathering wealth where they want, for their wants, we won't take no shit from you about "net regulation" when 4chan, home of pedopornography, racism, neo-nazism, bomb recipes, is still open to everyone since 10 years, despite evidence of the involvement of its creators, we won't take your lies when a hacker who shut down pedopornography sites has been sentenced to jail for longer than the sites creators. Internet sure is a dangerous place, and making people pay to enter a slaughterhouse is the kind of cynical shit we ain't puttin' with

I'm not a US citizen, but this sort of business combined with the possibility of merger on the part of the two largest ISPs in the US (who have largely non-overlapping coverage) points towards the ability of ISPs to privately censor the Internet, which is hardly an attractive picture.

Dont feed the big money makers anymore, dont feed the corporations.

The internet is almost as necessary to a successful and economically happy life as a telephone these days. —Shane Fitzgerald, Kendall Park, NJ

Net neutrality is so important. It allows for free and non discriminatory access to information, something I believe is an essential part of upholding the freedom of speech and the press from the first amendment in the modern age. It's also essential for getting small businesses, who can't afford to pay ISPs a no throttling fee, off the ground. If net neutrality isn't uphead, it will do irreparable harm to technological innovation, small businesses, and freedom of speech. Please do the right thing and support net neutrality.

With the way the world is going, the last thing citizens need is 'more' power in the hands of corporations, and less laws to protect them.
—Ben, ,

The internet is meant to be a free space where people are supposed to be allowed to go on whatever sites they wish, do whatever they wish. Limitations on the internet is a limitation on what we are allowed to do, say and see.

Internet has always been accessible to everyone and made it so that people are able to share things fast and cheap! How are people going to share their art if you kill net neutrality?
—Tiina Manninen, ,

Stop being money hungry. Even overseas internet providers have better speeds than the US and cost less. This is sad.
—Brandon Ong, El Monte, CA

If you do not restore net neutrality you are revealing that you truly do not operate with the public's best interests in mind. Many people depend on an open internet to make a living. This is making it exponentially harder for them to succeed. Also, in a country where there are still people without internet access, it is irresponsible to make it even more difficult for them to receive access. Defend the rights and wellbeing of the people you are supposed to be looking out for and reinstate net neutrality.

Let's not do this and keep the internet an open playing field for all.
—Elmer Barcenes, Queens Village, NY

This is not what any person, or "consumer" of the internet wants. This would create a monopoly on the internet; a usually free "market" where everyone has an equal opportunity for success destroyed because certain people cannot afford to have their product (web series, blog, journal, ect.) updated. This is a bad idea.
—Emily Murphy, Glen Mills, PA

With restrictions on the Internet you will restrict the plethora of mostly free knowledge that can be accessed. We will become a society of poverty and uneducation. Our college students that are already broke from outrageous tuition will loose aspiration to become anything as slowly their grades decline. Free Internet and sharing of wealth should be understood, not underwritten.

The greatest gift God, the Universe has given us is creativity. Creativity is no longer creativity when you forge and break the will of other creations to gain your own dream. That is destruction and the first step to going down a path that will lead to abyss. Are you truly this selfish? Do you intend to Ruin countless of Creations for profit? Look up to the stars and ask yourself if you can, the Universe will answer. God will answer. You have free will alike all of mankind. But there comes a time in life when Men and Woman want to build a dream, will you build this dream and only allow others? Or will you carry more sorrow that you can chew when you climb that mountain before your saved. Your choice. Destruction leads to Chaos. Mankind is not that, I am. And I support Universe Creativity. You would be wise to choose the same.

Consider the potential for discrimination against those with lower incomes (if you think the education gap is bad now, think what it will be when you have to pay to access what is currently free information) or against those of any identifiable group (what if an ISP wants to block sites about or owned by certain religions? races? sexual orientations? what if a scared and confused teenager needs to know something about mental or physical health, or about gender and sexuality, or about escaping a dangerous or abusive situation... and those websites are blocked or slowed?).
—Michael Schubert, Hershey, PA

Is it too much to ask that things stay the way as they are? It's bad enough that Google watches us like Big Brother and now we have to contend with possible restrictions on sites based on someone else's preference or bias. Because let's face it, you're going to make it legal for people to charge for access to sites. Please consider instead offering better Information Security options if that's what you're really worried about. Put the time and effort into developing a strategy for that instead of trying to control a network which is already well established.

Our history is one of people fighting the oppression of amoral megalomaniacs on every level in every country. Why do you think limiting our internet will keep us calm and sedated? Rebellion and unrest happen when you start forcing people to accept smaller cages. You would control us easier by giving us totally free net access - it's the difference between 1984 and Fahrenheit 451.
—Angela Keeley, ,

This seems very discriminatory toward lower income households. Are they not entitled to the same freedom and access to information as the wealthy? It can't be compared to tv which people can access over the air. You are giving control to the flow of information to a few cable companies. This needs to stop. The continued monetization of the internet a service that has become an essential economic tool in the united states is allowing the continued manipulation of the American population by large privatized corporations. The Internet is a utility for the cultural infrastructure of the United States and not treating it as such displays a complete inability for our representatives to put forward meaningful legislation that would protect the interests of their constituents.

It is difficult making money as it is. American citizens do not have the available cash to pay for every website they want to go to. Not only that, but no net neutrality would be a serious blow to internet artist communities, as well as people who make money by auctioning or selling things on the internet. It may seem good for big businesses, but it will kill small internet-based businesses, and small businesses is something that Americans thrive on. WE NEED NET NEUTRALITY BACK!

Dear Federal Communications Commission: The D.C. Circuit’s decision in the Verizon case dealt a huge blow to the open Internet. Right now there is no one protecting Internet users from ISPs that block or discriminate against websites, applications or services. Companies like Verizon will now be able to block or slow down any website, application or service they like. And they’ll be able to create tiered pricing structures with fast lanes for those who can afford the tolls and slow lanes for everyone else. It’s time for the new FCC leadership to correct the agency’s past mistakes and to reassert the agency’s clear authority over our nation’s communications infrastructure. To preserve the open Internet, the FCC must reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service. Use your authority to establish a solid legal footing for the vital policies and protections this court decision threatens.

—Bruna, ,

This is a disgusting infringements on the publics rights to information, not to mention the amount of businesses that will be impacted by this decision. It's a condescending attack on people already on low incomes that will ruin their ability to further their own education (through online tutorials, courses and encyclopedias) and take away their ability to host businesses on an open market platform. It's an attack on the very freedom of the public and it's an utter disgrace.
—J E Taylor, ,

Please restore net neutrality, this is outrageous.
—Shea Smith, Phoenix, AZ

Why are you striking down Net Neutrality? Do you honestly think this good for the economy? Because I can give you a few reasons why this will in fact cause a detriment to the economy. First, consider that a lot of businesses (small or otherwise) and individuals who advertise or operate online will be greatly impaired in their ability to reach and communicate with their customers. Why? Because having to pay to reach a company's website or use the social media sites that some businesses and individuals use to advertise and communicate with customers will deter customers from going to those sites and thus interfere with business and individual marketing. In addition, not all businesses and individuals can afford to pay extra to access their websites or advertising sites to communicate with customers and advertise new goods/services they're offering. A prime example of this catastrophe waiting to happen is how the destruction of Net Neutrality will affect freelance artists. Most often freelance artists operate entirely online, advertising on social media and art-specific sites, using those sites' private messaging features to communicate with customers, and receiving payments via paypal. In today's modern world, customers value speed and promptness. By destroying Net Neutrality, you're removing that speed and promptness, making it hard for that freelance artist to communicate with their customers, hard for customers to reach the sites where the freelance artist does their advertising, and hard for the freelance artist to update their advertising sites with changes to product pricing and availability. In short, you just put that freelance artist out of business. Another factor to consider is how will the loss of Net Neutrality affect students. Chances are a second grader won't be too heavily impacted by Net Neutrality's destruction, but consider the high schoolers and college students who need to conduct online research as part of their homework assignments. Many of these students can't afford to pay extra for what used to be the right to complete their homework in as timely a manner as possible. Think about that for a moment. By destroying Net Neutrality, you've turned each student's right to complete their homework as quickly as possible into a privilege that the majority of students cannot afford. Now you're probably thinking so what? What's the harm in making the students who can't pay for faster internet spend more time on their homework? Here's something that you need to understand. The US's grading system is extremely harsh, and most students are put under an extreme amount of pressure to succeed. The cost of putting in the effort required to obtain the A+ is that students frequently forego things like socializing, personal time, and sleep to complete their homework. Here's why that's a bad thing: foregoing any one of those things for long periods of time has a severe negative impact on students' health and development. Giving up on spending time with friends inhibits the student's development of social and relationship skills and can lead to problems such as anxiety, social anxiety, and depression as well as making communicating in a work setting a challenge in the future. Giving up on personal time can have similar effects. Personal time can be used for maintaining hygiene, cooking and eating, and doing fun activities that allow the student to decompress from a day of work and stress. Taking that away can lead to anxiety, depression, and tragedy. Lastly, foregoing sleep is a problem that needs to be addressed. Sleep is necessary to allow the brain to develop and retain information as well as to allow the body to restore its energy and recover from any physical strains. Long term sleep deprivation can lead to physical, mental, and emotional health problems, weakens the body's immune system, and causes anxiety and depression. If you think that losing a little sleep each night can't seriously be that bad, I have a story for you. In my senior year of high school, I averaged 4-5 hours of sleep every night, only half of what I needed to function properly, and for this I was diagnosed with post traumatic stress disorder. The reason for my sleep deprivation? Extensive amounts of time spend on my homework. I was extremely depressed, borderline suicidal, all because there was more homework than I could keep up with. A lot of my homework had an online component as well. If my right to access the materials I needed to complete my homework had been impeded by slow internet because my mother would have been forced to choose buying food and gas to get my brother and me to school over paying for faster internet, my homework would not have gotten done and I likely would have dropped out of high school. Now let me remind you of something. Students are the future of industry. They will be the business leaders, innovators, and customers of tomorrow, and if you impeed their ability to complete their homework and succeed in school, you inflict anxiety and depression on them, and sadly those two things often lead to suicide. Essentially you're becoming the most prolific mass murderer using minimal effort, and you're destroying the US's future in industry and innovation. Restore Net Neutrality before you effectively cripple the economy.
—, Pleasanton, CA

The internet has been a place of freedom for a long time. You shouldn't be making others pay for faster internet or even accessibility to it. This would damage those who make their money for living from selling things like crafts and art online, since either they can't afford to buy the faster internet or the customers can't. This would make more homeless people, more people would struggle financially. If you didn't create the internet, you have no right to charge people money for using it, when its been a place of freedom and creativity for so long.

Most places of employment have their job applications online. If you take too long while filling out an application, even if it is because of slow loading times, the application will be canceled and you'd have to start again. Slower internet for those who cannot afford the faster one will cut their chance of finding a job by a great deal.

Net neutrality is more important than making plutocrats even richer. Don't let them manipulate the system just to create even more inequality.
—Olivia Foss, Columbus, OH

The reason that the internet has flourished the way that it has is because of its free, unbiased access to content anywhere by anyone. The removal of net neutrality endangers that -severely- by allowing ISPs to charge more out of the pockets of Americans who are already hurting in their day to day lives with the mere cost of living, who will endorse internet fastlanes as they have already done to Netflix, just as an example. History has shown that the old saying 'Give an inch, take a mile' is painfully true, and without regulation, not only will our speed suffer, but so will our access to information, our ability to fight it, and many more doors will open for companies like Time Warner to take us for every red cent. Thank you for your time.

Net Neutrality is a class issue. It's utilizing and strengthening the monopolies which help perpetuate our class structure; imagine if we did this to public libraries. Limiting that information based on how much you can pay was obviously never a value our country stood for. If any politician is serious about reinstating the disappearing "middle-class" they're so fond of as talking points, they will stand firmly on the side of net neutrality.
—Emily Mitchell, Atlanta, GA

I have already been seeing the impact of this decision. My area already had limited access to speeds but since this decision my speeds have plummeted to the point where I am constantly thrown off the internet because I have been slowed down so much. It makes the internet almost unusable for more than checking email if even that. PLEASE! This action legalizes discrimination against any who live in rural areas with only one or two options for internet service. It gives companies full legal support to effectively limit access to any information they choose. It is federally legislated racketeering. Congratulations on a sweeping victory for corporate America while ignoring dozens of laws designed to prevent this exact scenario. Well done.
—Amanda Rosentrater, Crescent City, CA

Net nuetrality is amazing. If you make people pay more, many can lose their jobs (which is already an issue) and impact their businesses. I don't know what happened to the free America. I don't know what happened to the American dream. But I can tell you all we are doing is going down. Because this is ridiculous. The internet should be free. That's an issue many cannot get through their heads. Internet should be free, yet you want to take that freedom away. What's next? Our freedom of speech? That's already going away. I really don't want the internet to work this way.. I want it to be fair and just. Just as it's always been. This certainly doesn't make life easier for people who can't afford to pay more money for that type of internet service. What about us middle class citizens? We NEED out internet to be in tack. Sometimes just to get through the day.If this really happens it'll ruin the lives of millions. PLEASE don't go through with this. This is a terrible mistake. It shouldn't be this way. That is not how the internet should be. It should remain free for all and easy to access. That's why the internet is so loved. Not because people have to pay lots of money for it. The internet is a place where we come together and share ideas, it's like a public forum back in the days of old Rome, or anything like that. It's a safe place where we can share creative ideas, and meet like minded folks and work on things to better society. Limiting the way we do this by making people pay for sites such as twitter, facebook, tumblr, skype, etc. destroys this and sets us years back as far as the betterment of the human race goes. This is capitalism at its most disgusting where businesses have more rights than people, so many amazing discoveries and projects have been created due to the internet, so many small businesses and artists have found work and an audience, do not take that away.
—Tina Bayne, Hancock, MI

—Jennifer Reilly, Stamford, CT

As a college student, this infuriates me. The government already charges students way too much on a college education already when it should be investing in our, and thus the country's, future. The death of neutrality would mean no longer can students research any site they wish for their studies. Also, there are many people who use sites such as YouTube not only for entertainment purposes, but educational purposes as well. If we as students are to be expected to pay to watch a video that our professor has assigned to us to watch, outrage is to be expected. Social networking sites, which have promised the people many times, do more than just give angsty teenagers a space to complain and argue with their peers. It is a way that they can communicate with friends and family long distance in a way that no other form of communication can. The 99% is already approximately 250x poorer than the 1%. The lower and middle classes are barely distinguishable in terms of income. By taking down net neutrality, all we would be doing is paying for the upkeep of a CEO's Rolls-Royce. Stop economically abusing the 99%.

As a freelance artist, it is imperative that I have access to the internet for my job in networking and getting my art to people who are looking to hire me. Without net neutrality, countless thousands of americans would be losing jobs due to having to pay for specific sites. I also work for a caption telephone service, wherein our services are provided to deaf and hard of hearing over the internet. Killing net neutrality will mean these people will have to pay just to be able to connect and talk to their loved ones on a particular channel. The idea to charge for higher speed connections is ludicrous. Obviously only very wealthy people and very large companies can afford to do so. This action would limit the Internet to those who can afford it, which is entirely against how our society now functions, where every person in every job and every child in every school is expected to have Internet access. Just because some politicians and/or already giant corporations want to make more money does NOT mean that they can take that money from Americans on something so basic and essential as the Internet. This proposal is sickening to any American who knows that there is absolutely no reason for ousting Net Neutrality other than plain, simple greed.

—Gabriella S., Middletown, PA

To the morons who think that they are doing something good with this, ending net neutrality and all, just to let you know... Most of you people who approve of killing net neutrality have possibly watched at least one YouTube Video, Googled something, or laughed at funny gifs. with this you will no longer watch those youtube videos again, have most of your accurate google search results removed, and have bland Facebook walls for what? Removing porn websites and virus giving links? those are almost unremovable even if your censorship stops these sites, they will make their way past their censorship. That is why many TV shows ask for their young audiences for parental permission before even logging in to the internet, and said parents put parental restrictions preventing them from going to those questionable websites. Also just a heads up, if you fight against the internet, The internet fights back. remember SOPA? yeah the internet let you guys know it's a bad idea, google? protested against it. Websites like Facebook, Websites for Games, and even DeviantART, a website known for satisfying kinky fetishes and home to several fan-artists. If you censor the internet Facebook would be a bland wall of text from your friends, MANY video game companies advertise their products over the internet, and many fans can't even show their artwork and receive criticism/compliments for it. Remember if you try to fight the internet, the internet will fight back twice as hard with no mercy

This reclassification is disgusting. So many people make their living off their websites, and their customers seeing their work off sites like deviantart and tumblr, facebook, and etsy and that's only naming a few... And now you want to charge more to even access these sites or have your site seen by other people? It's disgusting. Restricting internet access will hurt everyone but especially the poor. A lot of us (myself included) already can't afford your rediculous pricing for cable, or satellite tv, so cheap streaming sites like Netflix and Hulu+ are our only source for tv as entertainment. Most of us are already forced to choose between having internet access or tv. And all you're going to accomplish from not restoring net neutrality is taking that choice away from us.
—Keilie hanson, San Clemente, CA

Do you even have any idea how many people depend on the internet just to survive? A lot of people run their entire business from either personal websites or as a part of a larger system, such as deviantART, tumblr, etc. Mostly I am only talking about artists, as that is what I know, but these people are in immediate danger of losing everything they need to make a living with this nonsense. If they can't afford to pay extra for better services then their work might not get out there, and even if they do, there is a high chance that potential clients are never going to see it because THEY can't afford to pay for extra speed or access to various pages! It's an absolutely disgusting and deplorable act of big companies trying to bleed even more money from an already struggling populace, and it needs to be overthrown immediately.
—Tyler Riordan, Oak Park, IL

keep the internet open
—Zoe, Newark, DE

The internet is not your local service provider or even FIBE network. It is a free service (granted you pay a monthly fee for data and internet services) to browse and explore the internet at your own leisure within your monthly data purchase. Do not destroy the internet for those who rely on it and the middle to lower class patrons who can not afford to pay extra for what is already a freedom.
—Sam Staddon, ,

Please take a stand in making sure the internet isn't ruined for everyone.

Keep in mind the children who want to start new projects for our nation that needs support and receive it through websites and public media. Without Net Neutrality you're hurting our future.
—Destiny N. Williams, Saint Peters, MO

Isn't this supposed to be a free country? Internet access is necessary for a successful modern life and this will enable blatant classism and exploitation by ISPs.
—Alison Schaefer, Rochester, NY

I'm a high school student ho ha finally gotten her own computer and parental guidance turned off. I use multiple sites to do home work and entertainment. Your taking way the internet from me and many like me. Please don't do this to us. It took forever to gain that trust from our parents, don't steal away our reward.
—Maia Jezierska, ,

Americans should not have to pay more to their internet provider just to access certain websites. This is not liberty or freedom: this is trying to take even more money from the people to give to those who do not require more. The internet is a space where those who are poor and those who are rich can communicate and share, and to end net neutrality is to put another barrier between the rich and poor. The internet and certain websites should not be just available to those who can pay, and I refuse to stand by and watch my rights be stomped upon just to give top executives more money that I and thousands of others do not have.
—Victoria Van Wey, Monona, IA

Please don't kill net neutrality! The government is always so quickly to take most trivial things away from us. They focus all their attention on trying to ban pixels when there are people dying in other countries because all they want is freedom from a harsh dictator or to end violent protests. Women being beaten in other countries because they so much as opened their mouth and said hello to their husband they don't even want to be with. But the government is worried about the internet? Come on how guys. Worry about something else. This passing will effect a lot of people who probably are trying to make the world a decent place.):
—Ashley B., Troy, NY

I do not live in America, bu I still realize how stupid removing net neutrality is. You can't, seriously can't have people pay more for certain services or for """""faaaaster""""""" internet-speed. The internet is an open space for people to say their opinion, have fun, meet new people and access important information. Today, internet is so integrated into people lives that removing or restricting it would seriously hadicap your people. Don't be this stupid, American government. I lost hope that you're decently competent a long time ago, time to prove me wrong.

I personally do a lot of work and and communication over the internet as an artist and additionally as a volunteer in health and human services work. Without net neutrality my ability to establish my own source if income will be in jeopardy... All to line the pockets of companies that are are already overflowing. People can't afford that. Not any more. Please stand up and help me and so many others.
—Emily Thompson, Littleton, CO

There is, honestly, absolutely no reason to do this. Yes, this is a capitalist society in America, but that DOES NOT MEAN that something as integral as the internet should be made into a resource to be bought and sold. ISPs are paid for one thing: Internet access. They should not be allowed to gouge their prices to give the more financially well-off a fast lane. All this does is increase the gap between richer and poorer. And that is terrible.

While I live in Canada, I know for a fact this is going to affect us too. You have absolutely no right to do this kind of stuff to further your selfish gains. You want a piece of the internet? Do something else besides trying to steal from others for once and get your god damn act together.
—Joshua, ,

Forcing companies to pay extra for bandwidth and fast internet service impacts the entire US economy as it favors big business and creates more obstacles for entrepreneurs and small mom and pop online shops.
—Christin Q., Bronx, NY

Keep the internet a place of full freedom. For some, it is the only true freedom they have.
—Kevin Arsenault, Salem, NH

The open Internet is today's central medium for discourse and information-gathering. Allowing selective throttling or closure of these communication channels implies elevating ISPs to entities with the authority of thought police. Whether such authority is exercised kindly or cruelly is irrelevant; it is unjust that they hold it in the first place.
—Colin P. Hill, Reading, PA

NOO!!! PLEASE!
—Octavio Villegas, ,

We NEED Net Neutrality. The internet is supposed to be a place where everyone can go to share information, entertain, and innovate. The internet as it is is something that is beautiful and means so much to a lot of people. By killing Net Neutrality and making people pay to go to certain websites, you close off a large amount of internet users, thus making information much harder to spread. Please, don't take the internet from us.

—Katie, ,

This is outrageous. You can't decide which website we're allowed to use and how - the Internet is SUPPOSED to be a place of freedom.
—Karolina, ,

This is appalling. The internet has not changed for years and NOW companies are trying to screw over the consumer for more money because they are corrupt and greedy.
—Joshua J Baker, Columbus, OH

No.
—Holly, ,

Don't do this to us. The internet is the one thing most of us have to openly and freely communicate, entertain, educate, and share information from one another all over the globe. It's the one free market the world has left to bring people together, you take that away and we lose everything.
—Lee Hollis, Atlanta, GA

The internet already reinforces class differences in the U.S. People need fora for their voices to be heard, even if they can't pay for them. That is essential to an informed electorate and a working republic.
—, Long Beach, CA

This is simple FCC, most popular sites on internet, made themselves popular because they were free, fast and accesible, imagine if you must think in something on everyday should i or shouldn't i? you would have to eat everyday salad 'cause is what you can pay, what you are able to do, and the only thing that is able on the store
—Micaela Pozywiak, Buenos Aires,

Oink oink, congress. Do the right thing.

I NEED the internet for educational purposes and to pursue my dream of being an Orthopedic Surgeon in the medical field.

This is sickening! We barely make rent, and now this limit sites, some of which are required for school courses and other research, is just stupid.
—, Portland, TN

The right to Internet access, also known as the right to broadband, is the view that all people must be able to access the Internet in order to exercise and enjoy their rights to Freedom of expression and opinion and other fundamental human rights, that states have a responsibility to ensure that Internet access is broadly available, and that states may not unreasonably restrict an individual's access to the Internet. Internet access is recognized as a right by the laws of several countries.
—David Sartoris, Coal City, IL

This negatively impacts so many people, and is an extremely negligent choice. The internet, and the access to information that it provides, is necessary to the continuing or initial education of so many people, and the decisions being made will impact low income individuals and families most of all. This decision reads as greedy and negligent, and I very much hope that the FCC will reconsider Net Neutrality.
—Vixie Brown, ,

You freaking maniacs, how could you even conceive such a horrid idea?
—Jonathan, Weatogue, CT

This decision will be death to thousands of small and independant buisnesses and tradespeople who rely on the internet for their livelihood. It is not the sole domain of a few large companies and they should not be able to make decisions about how it is used.
—Katherine Morgan, Alexandria, VA

I'm a poor, hungry college art student. I often have to make the decision of buying groceries or art supplies for class. I don't want to add internet premiums to that to access my clientele or to spread my work.
—Sydney Wills, Boise, ID

Net Neutrality is important! We cannot give in to cooperate greed! If net neutrality is not restored it could mean the end of our modern world as we know it. No longer can we speak openly and freely to all parts of the world, small business will be destroyed, school that are online only based will lose most of their students because of the extremely high cost it could potentially set. Please resort net neutrality.

Can we not have at least ONE thing that everyone can access freely and equally? The internet offers access to many things such as information, entertainment, news, keeping connected with people, and not restoring Net Neutrality would be a complete disaster for many, many people.

Please take the feelings of all the people into consideration. Net neutrality is the best thing we've had for the web.
—Rchell Woods, Knoxville, TN

This is purely wrong because it affects many like myself who are small business owners and freelance artists who do much of their business over the internet. Really, striking down net neutrality and making people who already can barely afford internet pay more to access everything is something that will only aid in the destruction of the economy.
—Claire Perez, Normal, IL

The internet is a much more vast, complex place than these anti-neutrality bills try to make it out to be. Even if nothing comes from the future bill, it would pave the way for further antipathy towards business-related rights. At the worst, it could become a form of censorship similar those in China or Iran, with the only difference in that it is also corporation-sanctioned legal extortion.

This needs to stop NOW. The Cable Companies have no right to do this to everyone. No one except those big corporate people with millions of dollars in their wallets wants this to happen. This is wrong and you all know it
—Kelly Joule, Brooklyn, NY

The Internet is an anarchy-based network of hope and wonder mixed with the realism of cynicism and darkness of human nature. Don't take it away from us. We, the users, need this wild, untamed frontier of the 'Net to explore our world and make it better. Some people try to sabotage this by being horrible online, but I've found that, overall, the Internet is a wonderful place where anything is possible--good or bad. Leave it alone. We have little enough control over our own lives as it is with bureaucracy becoming so over-involved in every single aspect of our collective existence that we need somewhere to let our hair down, so to speak, and let our passions shine through unbridled. Do not touch our friends and family that we've found online. Legislators need to stop pushing bills that they don't understand and aren't affected by in their alabaster marble buildings with everything provided to them by the people they hurt.
—Amber Jackson, Union, SC

Do not Allow Net Neutrality to perish. This would be an egregious affront to our freedoms and to all of the college students who can barely afford tuition, books, rent, phone, food, electricity/utilities, and other bills... Then to have to pay for internet? Which is almost REQUIRED for college and studying nowadays. This would be a horrible decision. Do not allow this.

Why would you eliminate the freedom of the internet, when it has become a basic form of communication, replacing mail service, and phone service to speak, and visually see family members all around the world. Instead you're too focused on money, and power.
—Eugene Broyles, Fort Walton Beach, FL

The idea that the internet should be limited is one of great idiocy. People rely on the internet to be a place where any ideas can become a reality and for people who thought that they were alone with their interests can communicate with others with the same interests. Please, do not take that away from us.
—Mark James, Sellersburg, IN

AT&T already capped my home internet plan. I'm paying the same price I used to, only now I don't have unlimited home internet- I have 150GB per month. In a household with multiple residents on their computers, we end up going over our limit every month and have to pay an extra fee. What was once unlimited and unrestricted, worked very well and helped those who needed it. Now, that very thing, has been limited by certain providers, and someone wants to limit it even further? The thing was never broken, so why are you trying to fix it?
—Maxwell Hallwachs, Grand Terrace, CA

The Internet was created for the freedom of spreading information. Money should not make you more free.

Good internet access is essential for me to be able to perform well in my college courses. Not only do I have to use the internet for research purposes, I also have to use it in order to get access to Moodle, an online format where professors publish everything related to the course, from assignments to study guides to the course schedule. Moodle is the only format outside of the physical classroom (and the only format if the course is 100% online) where I can stay current with the expectations of the courses I am currently enrolled in, and considering that some of my courses meet only once a week, checking Moodle is a requirement. It is also worth noting that many professors now require major projects and assignments to be submitted via Moodle, and if you don't have an adequate internet connection, the website is unable to upload your assignments. Math courses at the university I attend also use an online program for math assignments, and with a slow internet connection, it simply is not possible to do these assignments. I already pay thousands of dollars a year to obtain an education, please don't let private companies satisfy their greed at the expense of my education.

Information should not be taxed. Nickel and dime the population for access to the internet and that is what you're doing. We need to support lower income citizens, not make life harder.
—Emily Robbins, Seattle, WA

Letting the internet, the most widespread source of up to the second information worldwide, be controlled by those with the deepest pockets is a one way ticket to the kind of information policing that we see in dystopian future movies.
—Monique Taylor, Santa Maria, CA

I'm fucking pissed! Restore Net Neutrality now! This is the land of the free! Not the land of tax and pay for everything!
—, Canton, MI

This change does not serve a free market economy, and will squash young new creators before they can get their ideas off the ground. It will benefit the few, not the many. Net Neutrality is very important to me for this reason.

We need this reversed and now
—Sam swaine, ,

This is absolute crap and it's rediculous.
—Molly, Walpole, MA

Net Neutrality encourages innovation and the creative spirit. Without it America will surely fall behind other countries with an open internet. It will cause increase in prices with a decrease in quality of service.
—Victoria, Norcross, GA

Net neutrality is a human rights issue. Do not let information become a commodity.

As an artist- SAVE THE OPEN INTERNET! So many people are depending on the freedom the open Internet gives us to share our work with the world- we can't have that taken away from us- it's what pays the bills and furthers our reach of connecting with other creative types. So many people's lives will be ruined if this happens, mine included. This is absolutely terrifying.
—Allison White, Rathdrum, ID

The internet isn't like television. Don't treat it as such. This is like being able to charge extra to read specific pages of an encyclopedia. That's ridiculous.
—Mr. Ryan Bloom, Lafayette, CO

How are small businesses supposed to thrive when they can't even get their foot in the door by making a website? Websites are a crucial part in running a business... Taking that away would be the same as taking away the American Dream!
—Matthew Edwards, Schaumburg, IL

Quit fucking around with this fascist bullshit.

I have enough trouble paying my bills now, I don't need anyone making it more difficult.
—Julie Schreiber, Westport, NY

Please restore Net Neutrality.
—Colene Wiley, Fremont, NH

END IT
—Shannon Reichardt, Forest Hill, MD

I'm a college student and use the internet for several hours every day for both entertainment and school. It is amazing how much content is speedily available to us! Without net neutrality, our freedoms and choices will be greatly restricted. Aren't those freedoms a fundamental aspect of our country? Please do not give these corporations all the power. It will put those of us who have very little money in a very bad place. I love using the internet because I CAN afford it. There are sacrifices I have to make with other things, and I do not want the internet to be a place where I will charged merely to have a site load at a reasonable speed. There are many, many people apart of the internet culture--breaching this culture with such a restrictive action is not something that should happen in a country as advanced as ours. Please do not destroy the internet for us--and our well-beings that go along with it. I hope you take this to heart! Do not think of the benefit of large corporations like cable companies that already have more than enough money, but think instead of the many individuals who will be impacted by this in their daily lives.
—Ivy Engwall, Stevens Point, WI

Don't take away my sunshine. The internet is my life
—Meagan Pack, Murfreesboro, TN

Don't make the internet slow for those who can't pay to access the sites they want to access or need to access. Imagine how many college students who won't be able to work on their project because they can't access certain sites. Or how many business's will slow down. Or how many people won't be able to get the info they want or need. The Internet is an amazing thing, don't force us to fall back to the dark ages before we had internet. We need internet and everything that comes with it.
—Katie Ussery, Ballinger, TX

Let's no do it. Stop it —Jaden, Aurora, CO

we already pay to have internet... where does that money go? ads all over every page pay each site we go to... If they will make us pay to visit the site then make it illegal to post ads on the internet.

—K jay, ,

This can't happen

The Internet is meant to be a space where humankind can share ideas, art, and stories without the need for borders or middle-men. This ruling would go against everything that the Internet was ever meant to be and turn it into yet another way for the corporate capitalist structure of this country to suck the populace dry. Don't support this ruling, it will kill the Internet as we know it.
—Evan Helenihi, Palm Harbor, FL

Time to move to Europe.
—Vincent, Fairbanks, AK

NET NEUTRALITY IS IMPORTANT TO US STUDENTS! We need internet freedom and open access to these resources. My family can't afford to pay more of luxuries than that of what we have right now. I beg of the FCC to not make the rash decision of closing an education outlet, a creative outlet, the social outlet (for those contacting famines from afar) because if there is a standstill on how we connect to others/to information then how do we move forward into the future of our society???

I need net neutrality to ensure that I have equal access and availability to potential clients and collaborators. Modern employment is a hellscape of poverty and financial stagnation. Most of the positions in my field are temporary, or by commission, which means that I spend a great deal time bidding and advertising myself for the opportunity to work. Slowing my internet accessibility will take away any hope I might have had to be self sufficient.

WHY IN THE HELL WOULD YOU DO THIS?!
—Hannah Fortney, Saint Augustine, FL

I don't have a problem with corporations making money, but when they're legally allowed to squeeze customers for all that they have, or more than that, there's something extremely wrong. With so much business being run through the internet, even if only partially, net neutrality needs to be in place, or our society will be shoved back by at least a decade.

As a freelance artist whose sole income is and has been based upon the free use of the internet, I'm outraged. Thanks to this, I will have to decide between buying groceries/paying rent and spending even more money for access to my art sites. 90%of my customer base will probably not even show again due to the rise in price. Guys, everyone should have free access to the internet. Not everyone can pay for a "service" but everyone does have the right to access knowledge, information, connection to the world, the ability to see things far away from them, to find things close that was once hidden. Destroying net neutrality is killing possibility, chance, hope, and minimum wage worker's ability to find jobs and apply to them. It's killing a college student's work ability, killing the single-parent's relaxation, killing an easy way to share ideas and meaning and life across the world. You kill net neutrality, you cut off the legs of this generation's body and also your own.

The discrimination factors of ceasing Net Neutrality will be massive; the scale at which information will be controlled, and whose perspectives will be favored in things like the news online, will have detrimental consequences. This can and will act as a silencer for groups that those in power do not want to have heard. Not only is this (especially in a time where we are trying to advance beyond the destructive ideologies of our past) extremely dangerous, it could even be said that it constitutes as a breach of the First Amendment.

I am currently getting a masters in science in information studies at the University of Texas at Austin, one of the top information schools in the country. One of the cornerstones of library and information science is access to information and how we as professionals can continue to increase access in innovative ways. Net neutrality is vital to people and communities, and without it the digital divide will only deepen. Creating new hierarchies in society is damaging at best. As a graduate student and an artist I rely on affordable internet access for classwork, research, and raising my profile as a creator. As a future information professional, net neutrality is one of the tenants I will hold as a foundation of my work.

I already have to pay for every cent of my college education myself. This would make my life significantly harder.
—Chloe Pierson, Olympia, WA

The internet, even though we pay for it via ISPs, is a relatively free service. Killing net neutrality is killing startup businesses, killing artists, killing the people who use the net neutrality to spread the truth and make their living. Killing net neutrality is killing the rights of people.
—Sarah Jodeh, Brownsville, TN

This ruling is incredibly dangerous to free markets and consumer rights.
—Justin Teager, Columbus, OH

Please.
—Tori Zimmerman, ,

Paying to go onto a website is not okay! The internet would be less useful and fun!
—Julian Roach, Newport News, VA

If you do let this go through, You will be crushing the public's ability to fend for themselves in a harsh recession. Right now, lots of people have taken their business to the internet, especially home and self businesses and if you allow this they will be competing with major services which they have no chance of getting any money without paying a huge price for it. A price they cannot afford. not only that, it could hit major store websites too like amazon and ebay. If people are forced to pay more to view and use those websites, they wont have any money to actually SPEND on those sites thus negating consumerism. We need people to SPEND money. And this motion will deter them from spending money on these stores and small businesses which will drop us to an even deeper recession than we are in now. Don't let them do this —Jennifer, Lynwood, CA

Do not turn internet access into a shit tier package. How overly controlling and ridiculous? ?
—Haley Jones, Cohutta, GA

Net neutrality is one of the single most important issues of the 21st century. Don't allow corporate monopolies to place our great country on the wrong side of history.
—Steven Anderson, Cotati, CA restore it please

—Etoile Rhodes, Vestal, NY

Neg neutrality is a vital part of the presevation of humans rights all over the world. By destroying it you are also destroying freedom of speech. And as this is a decision that affects citizens all over the world it is NOT something that can be decided by the U.S alone.
—Carlos Mandara, ,

Understand that by taking away net neutrality...you take away slowly what it means to live in a FREE country.
—Monica Lara, Las Cruces, NM

NO!
—Emma Nicholas, Hesperia, CA

Please do not leave us at the mercy of corporations.
—, Langley, WA

Stop trying to turn this country into a policed state.
—Alex, Oakley, CA

The internet is an important and vital part of our society, where people from different walks of life can come together to exchange ideas. To make it simply another way to serve the rich and ignore everyone else is irresponsible, morally corrupt, and greedy. It would have a detriment to the economy, if people do not want to pay more to access sites where they can shop online, and the effect it would have on learning and culture would be irreversible. The internet has enabled the newest generation to be the most interconnected and knowledgeable yet. This act would strip away all the progress that has been made in the last 20 years.

—Summer Rosalie Robinson, Belgrade, MT

Net neutrality is the only thing that will keep some people using the internet. There will be multitudes of people who are unwilling to pay for internet service without complete access to any site, and there are those who will be unable. Net neutrality should not be permitted to die.
—Brandi Johnson, Bulls Gap, TN

Net neutrality is the most important debate of the current age, and killing it is absolutely the wrong decision.

While we pay for the service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

—Vanessa Ramirez-A., San Antonio, TX

The difference between the rich and poor is ever growing, and all this does is drastically increase that difference. Many people make a living of the internet, the internet is supposed to be a free place for everyone to use equally, now the rich will get to dictate the internet. America is slowly changing back to how it was when people like Carnagy controlled the country, we're turning into a wealthy controlled Oligopoly, and this just pushes us one step further.

Net Neutrality is literally Hitler.
—Brett Schaaf, Dayton, OH

Please do not do this. Keep the internet equal and free. The country already is so divided in terms of class and access to resources that by taking these steps would further contribute to the evergrowing gap. The internet is an absolute necessity nowadays to accomplish any small task that is is unacceptable to withhold such resources from the less elite.

Bad enough that people in rural areas are already severely limited in their choices when it comes to ISPs. By getting rid of Net Neutrality, users in rural areas are left with even fewer choices - pay even more ridiculously high prices for internet access, or go without. For some people - yes, even those in rural areas - internet access is a vital part of their livelihoods. We've got enough people in Washington fighting to keep profits high for corporations. Try doing the same for the general public. Restore Net Neutrality and leave the American people with at least one space where the word "equality" isn't just so much empty air.

There are too many schools who require the internet to teach. There are too many small businesses who require the internet in order to function. The internet has evolved from more than just a means of communication. For nearly two generations, it's become a way of life for them as well as those currently around now. This goes far beyond getting lagged during an online gaming session or not being able to browse certain sites. This is about an open internet for all. Please, things are hard enough as it is. Don't let 1% of the population dictate how 99% of us have to struggle just to make ends meet. Do your service to the majority.

—Grace Quinn, Cheyenne, WY

Tolls on the internet? SERIOUSLY? I know it's called the "information super highway" but this is just completely ridiculous. This has to be in some way negating a person's rights to education or free speech.... If a person can't access an informational site because they can't afford it, how is that not violating their right to know about the thing they want to research? If they can't afford to get onto a social media site or blog site how are they expected to express their feelings of rage and unfairness regarding this inane piece of legislation?

Striking down Net Neutrality is ridiculous and shows that the FCC dramatically favors big corporations over the average American citizen. Shape up and let the internet be neutral again!
—Sarah, Elon, NC

First off, I'm not an american citizen but this will affect the internet so I could pull some crap about how I am a citizen of the internet, but that's not quite true. However by not protecting the internet you put a lot at risk. Imagine the internet shutting down, even for as little as a week. What would happen? Much of the current economic sector is based on or utilizes the internet. In short there would be chaos. As society is today the internet is not just a service, it's more of a necessity. One might even go so far as to say it's a right. But no matter what one thing is certain, the only winners in a world without free internet is the service providers.
—Daniel Nordqvist, ,

—Austin Haynes, Naples, FL

Restore net neutrality! Don't take away the free internet we need most. Making content providers pay ISPs for a "fast lane" makes it so little people like me cannot access free content that I love. Just because they can't pay. Is this really the world we live in? Only the richest can have the best quality of life? Making this decision takes away from a vast majority of people, and diminishes their quality of life.

—Brian Elmore, Louisville, KY

The internet is something where people of all races, cultures, ages and beliefs can come together and be equal. Taking an action like this will only segregate humanity in yet another way. This should be a tool for learning and communication, not something for a company to make more money on. For those that can barely even afford internet this is even more of a slap in the face. How would you feel if you went to see a movie but only people who were able to walk on there hands were able to sit in the front or middle rows and you had to sit in the back on the left and watch the movie with sheer fabric over your eyes. You can see it but not the same as everyone else. Please keep net neutrality. I believe it's important for the evolution of human society.
—Nichole Sheppard, ,

I feel very strongly about this. Net neutrality is important for one of the fastest developing, most far-reaching, ripe markets in existence today. Giving major corporations such incredible power over it will literally kill hundreds of small businesses, if not thousands, if not more.
—Eric J. Chucci, Crestline, OH

This is dumb

The internet is a communications platform, and should be maintained as such. This new ruling will destroy the internet as we know it and make it as bloated and bogged down as the entirety of our entertainment industries. Get out of the internet, it's the only place in this world that we are still free.
—Brittany Vernon Carnes, Easton, PA

What does it say about America, when you're raising children to know that commercialism is above everything in this country? That their needs, even for online information are second to someone making money? This is wrong and something that needs to be addressed.
—Armani, Chicago, IL

No. The beauty of the internet was that it was equal, that everyone could grow, develop, learn. We DON'T want another TV. We DON'T want more control over us. MONEY is not everything in this world and you need to remember this or else there will be no future, neither for me, you, or your children. The world you know will die if the highest moral is money. Don't let that happen.

Net Neutrality is not okay. It infringes on our first amendment rights.
—Brandon M Cuppoletti, Petaluma, CA

Screw paying more for internet because they want to slow sites. A. Sites already pay enough for bandwidth and B. They're probably going to make US pay more for the slow internet. It already isn't cheap.

—Brittanie Baird, Greenwood, IN

The internet is like the one thing I can afford right now. It is imperative to my mental health.
—Kayla Robley, Fargo, ND

The internet is one of the incredibly few and diminishing things underprivileged citizens of America can indulge in. We all come to our favourite websites to relax and unwind, to talk to friends we wouldn't be able to talk to otherwise. Do not take that away from us. My family of 3 working full-time jobs can barely afford to live in a small townhouse and if you start forcing us to pay for certain websites you're just making life more difficult for 80% of the people like me. Restore Net Neutrality because the internet is one of the few things keeping me and a lot of others sane with juggling school, a job, and family responsibilities.

—Dragon RelykS, Wartrace, TN

This is an international thing since most websites are hosted from the US so if those dickheads do actually destroy net neutrality, basically a huge part of the world would protest and this would turn really ugly. Come on, FCC, you're surely smarter than to make the whole world your enemy, are you?
—Kai F., ,

You would be hurting millions of peoples lively hoods. No, I don't mean just cat pictures on the internet. I make my LIVING off of the internet right now. Artists, Game artists, streamers, Bigger and smallger game companies, coders, web developers, and SO MUCH MORE will be harmed by this. STOP IT. Don't allow internet providers to do this! THIS IS NOT LIKE A ROAD THAT NEEDS THE TOLL BOOTH TO PAY FOR IT TO GET REDONE EVERY YEAR. THIS IS THE INTERNET. THEY ALREADY HAVE THE MONEY THEY NEED. DON'T HURT US IN THE MIDDLE. YOU'RE THROWING US INTO POT HOLES AND WATCHING US DROWN.

The internet is great the way it is. I don't think it's fair to charge extra amounts of money just to enter a website I normally used, or watch my shows in Netflix. I already pay for my Internet, sometimes even more thanks to my internet supplier. Please, don't make the wallet of the consumer cry. We already pay a lot of billes.
—Zamanta Vaquerano, Poway, CA

The internet doesn't belong to any single person or company. Therefore, nobody should be forced to pay more for any single website. We're already paying for access to the internet itself.

While I'm not American, I do believe in the importance of Net Neutrality. Do not make the same mistake Mexico did. You have literate and thinking citizens whom are telling you exactly what not to do and you seem to not be listening, please apply the power of democracy you were entitled to have when you became a court officer. Think about history, how you dismantled the monopolies of Rockefeller and Morgan, that decision was the key for the exponential growth of American in the XXth century, now you're reverting that decision by giving the power to 4 companies to control the only platform that actually gives the whole humanity the freedom of speech and the freedom to choose what to see, listen, learn, share, and do.
—Roberto Jauregui, ,

If this law stays in effect it will monopolize the internet to the corporate powers, to the point where no competition may rise up, and they can charge what they want for their service.
—John Michel, Villa Park, CA

Net Neutrality is so important! People should not be able to restrict access to the free information out there, especially when we already pay to access the internet. Forcing companies to have to pay a premium just to have their sites be accessible only hurts everyone in the long run.

Social Stratification has no place on the internet. It should remain as it is, a free think tank/ think environment,a place to access fast media for various occasion. As well as an avenue for consumer/ goods exchange in real time.
—Meredith Thornburg, Gastonia, NC

Having net neutrality allows internet access for all people to be equal. Without this equality we would be stunting education and the ability for young minds to study topics that they may not have access to do to a low economic status. What if it is one young mind that have the ability to find the cure for cancer or aids but can't due to limited resources? The internet is a resource, it shouldn't be monopolized.

—Julia Rittiner, Denham Springs, LA

This is one of the most unfair things I have ever heard of, we can barely pay for the internet as it is already, having to pay MORE for something I should day get as a citizen of this country is unfair and discriminating.
—McKinsey Locklin, Milton, FL

This is ridiculous. Internet has always been easily accessible and free to use for everyone, equally. That's the whole basis of it. Not restoring Net Neutrality for flimsy reasons will only promote inequality everywhere, even outside the net. Open your eyes.
—Jenni Railo, ,

My small online business depends on this.
—Alex Reisner, Waxahachie, TX

What the FUCK?
—Arrianne Coleman, ,

Bring back Net Nutrality for good. Why must one company hold the "fast passes" for the internet? Everyone should be able to go online and do/see what they want when they want. It's a part of our culture, and for more than two-thirds of internet users, their way of making money in this economy. Companies will lose a lot of business if everyone isn't able to get on their site or service.
—David Cruz Bonilla, Torrance, CA

My work is creating stable internet applications for the free and open web. The internet is a NETWORK. It's millions of people around the world working together to make the internet as we know it. It's not anybodies place to impede this. If net neutrality is not restored our world will change forever, in the most negative way.

—Mackenzie Sepler, Port Townsend, WA

Taking away net neutrality will only hinder the American people and line the pockets of the already rich companies. Don't take away a free space for us to express ourselves.
—Courtney Myers, Monroe, MI

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. The Internet is not merely another access point for entertainment and social networking, it is a place where people can say what they want when they want without the fear of someone breathing down their backs when they do so. Free speech is a basic human right outlined in the American Bill of Rights, and restricting such would be like restricting the Seattle Times, Ted Talks, and art conventions from saying what it is that they wish to say. Net Neutrality is essential.
—Jeff, Renton, WA

If the internet is not kept open, there will be no internet to speak of.
—Danyel Stanley, Moorhead, MN

—Hannah, ,

This decision is affecting every single person on the internet whether for personal reasons or reasons that contribute to their livelihood. There are people making ends meat by the ways of the internet and to not have Net Neutrality is, to put lightly, ridiculous. Furthermore, charging for certain websites will only deter people from going on them, and therefore the companies who are charging for them will not be getting any profit. Yes our generation would be considered "technology addicts" but they will certainly not feed this addiction. This generation knows right from wrong and this is why we are taking action.
—Kylie Warren, Tucson, AZ

The internet is often compared to the wild west for its lack of active regulation. I feel that this has helped vastly to shape the internet we use and love today and has improved the lives of every person who has access to the internet. If the FCC wants to take that away, I feel that we'll see a great decrease in innovations and new great ideas from internet aspirants.

Who will decide what we do and don't get to access? Small businesses and freelancers looking to operate over the internet will have their livelihood negatively impacted, I'm sure. I also doubt the continued functionality of what is for many people a vital tool. I don't know what more I can say that hasn't already been said far more eloquently. As a computer technician who sometimes has to work from home, I need unrestricted access to an assortment of sites to help me help the end user. As a writer, I need to do enough research to make my fictional worlds and characters feel real, which requires unrestricted access to sites that wouldn't exist without net neutrality. As a volunteer, I need to have immediate access to mental health resources from around the world, so as soon as someone messages me, i can help them. As a recovering student, I can't afford exorbitant prices for this, in addition to my student loan bill every month. As a person, I have a right to information, and net neutrality protects that right. Restore Net Neutrality. Reclassify Internet access as a telecommunications service. Protect our right to information, our right to share, create, and communicate.

This will do away with free Wi-Fi zones. Please make this a communication open air status with no tier service. Any through the air device (radio, TV, Wi-Fi, etc.) should be free to the citizens of this country and not held by a greedy corporation for their own means. Once again, this should be treated as public airwaves.
—Patricia Bradford, Clover, SC

Having equal packet priority on the Internet will and has allowed for innovative small business and individuals to bring about nearly fundamental changes to the way we as Americans live. Without having equal priority for all packets and allowing ISPs to block or discriminate against the origin of the packets, you have created a harsher environment for the formation of ideas and business. By creating this tiered system, it will inhibit economic growth and new innovation while simultaneously enabling the possible formation of a monopoly. Your decision is one that is taken against the majority opinion of the public the government you serve represents and against the better interest of international relations as packet discrimination will stifle international business interest and accessibility in the United States. This foolish decision should be reversed not only for the betterment of competition and cooperation on the Internet, but for the interest of the American public and the world community.
—Daniel Robertson, Forest, IN

Controlling the internet (or allowing companies to control the internet if they pay) is, at its most basic, taking away some of the freedom that we Americans are so proud of. The internet is a shared space, one that facilitates communications and the widespread transmission of ideas. Taking away net neutrality would be incredibly damaging not only to our personal lives, but to communities (and the world wide web) on a global scale.

You need to restore Net Neutrality.
—Cristina Genao, Miami, FL

Now this is something I can get behind RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!
—Maisie O'Neill, ,

Let everyone access the Internet. Bring back Net Neutrality.
—Riona Gallagher, Allendale, MI

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Rachel Diaz, Miami, FL

Just please bring it back
—Elena Vander Els, Briarcliff Manor, NY

The internet is a great resource that can educate and bring people together. Do not make the internet for the rich. Information should be for everyone. Net Neutrality Forever.
—Jordan Jones, Troy, AL

for free internet!
—Oswaldo Montilla, ,

This sounds like a horrible way for the rich to get richer and to keep the everyday person down. Hate the fact that this is even an option for the FCC. The internet is the last place that you can access anything at anytime without corp. America telling you what you can and cannot do. This is china status with their censorships.
—Jonathan palacios, Anaheim, CA

How kind of you to take our rights away one at a time.

I oppose special internet fast lanes.
—Jane Fischer, Bala Cynwyd, PA

Please don't make the internet more expensive!! Business will plummet and nobody will want to use it because we're fucking poor as it is, more money out of our pockets is not an option, and 9 times out of 10 food will be more important than internet packages to access free sites like Tumblr and Facebook. Net Neutrality for ALL!!!
—Kadie, Andrews, NC

This is messed up.
—Brittany Jennings, Enterprise, AL

Keep the web a level playing ground PLEASE!
—Danielle Bonazzoli, Roxbury Crossing, MA

Companies already make massive amounts of money from online users already. There is absolutely no reason to allow for this. It can detrimentally impact the economy by wiping out small businesses, hurt those that make their living off creative and preforming arts, and limit our 1st Amendment rights. Freedom of speech is especially important online.

In the interest of preventing a capitalist police state that hinders mass communication and open internet access, please restore Net Neutrality.
—Sam Scolari, Henderson, NV

A lot of people make money , or form friendships and romantic relationships through the internet. Taking it away wouldn't be a very smart thing to do. It would stop people from learning and discovering new things. This is ridiculous.
—Kamila, ,

This is unacceptable. I'm so furious at how outrageous it is that the rich in this country keep getting more rich and slowly want to take away everything from anyone without enough money. Why does it always have to be about money?
—Branden Watts, Olmsted Falls, OH

Please keep Net Neutrality around it harms artists, gamers and everyone. No one wants to pay a superficial premium for internet speeds. Please, reconsider.

—Chloe McCann, ,

You may pass it for now, BUT WE WILL DESTROY YOUR MONEY IN POLITICS AND HAVE A REAL Democracy !! I i hate you, your evil because you don't value you human beings living better lives but instead want money for your short single snobby life, Generations will read your names in history as corrupt politicians only looking out for yourselves.
—Joshua Parker, Providence, RI

This is classist--allow me to maintain the access I have always had to the internet. I do not pay for TV service because I cannot afford to pay for TV service. I choose to allocate what discretionary money I have to pay for internet service because I believe it is an incredible resource. I would like to keep that resource. Discontinuing my ability to make and share content just because I don't have Inc. on the end of my name is unfair and unjust. I know the US loves capitalism... but you'd be surprised how much the free market thrives on the internet as it exists today. Please maintain that free market.

—Joshua Thomas, Gardner, MA

Please reconsider.
—Amy-Liz, ,

Creating this opportunity for corporations to create tiered pricing structures is akin to charging more for one to breathe cleaner air.
—McKay Felt, Centerville, UT

The internet should be a safe and free place to be, not like tv and have all websites paid for monthly just to visit.
—Jill Turner, Woodstock, GA

Its time to end the pandering to corporate interests with deep pockets and massive amounts of lobbyists. The citizens of this country, the people who voted you into office to represent THEIR interests, have been betrayed by your short sighted decision making. Do the right thing and reverse this clear case of corporate pandering at the expense of individual freedom. It spits in the face of everything this country stands for and reeks of corruption.

Internet needs to be changed to a public utility, recognized as a human right by the United Nations. These rulings will do much more damage then any amount of good.
—Chet Coenen, Omaha, NE

The internet is a valuable resource for all sorts of people who would never have a voice any other way, and is a truly amazing way for anyone to connect and share amazing amounts of information in seconds. Blocking and monetizing the web is going against the exact purpose it was created for- a means of connecting the world on a scale unimaginable previously. Please stop making senseless changes that change the lives of everybody.

This has to stop, it affects people across the world, the internet must not be regulated.
—Luke Spencer, ,

Don't kill the internet, net neutrality is what breathes life into the internet, what makes it unique, without it it will be basically TV, all the lesser known poorer sites will be pushed out. If net neutrality never existed companies like Facebook, Netflix and similar companies, would have never rose to their current state. They've boosted the economy and become a part of American life, don't let the cable companies corrupt one of the last bastions of true freedom. Please —Richard Landry-Gaters, Oklahoma City, OK

do not.
—, Queensbury, NY

All television companies have equal acess to programmers, websites should have equal acess to speed I want every website I go on to load at the speed I'm paying for I'm paying for 7mbps I want EVERY single website I go on to load at 7mbps. If I'm putting my money into a service I expect it to be equal across the board. Basically I just want what I'm spending my hard earned money on and fast and slow lanes are NOT what I'm putting my money into. I pay for 7mbps I want 7mbps on every single website big or small. This whole idea is bad for the United States' internet business I could take my business elsewhere and so could others because at least then, then, I could get what I pay for. Unacceptable FCC.

—Christian Byrd, Chula Vista, CA

The internet is an incredibly important resource. By allowing companies to greedily charge more for certain sites, you are letting growth of people and knowledge die out. How can people possibly create new business when people can't even go to their sites? How can a highschooler or college student do the necessary research for their education when the academic websites they need run slower than facebook? How can you let this happen?
—Nicole Adamson, Riverside, CA

Freedom of access. Why limit our global connection? Why shut a large portion of your nation off from itself and the world?

—Kyle Broflovski, Chicago, IL

Don't kill the internet as we know it, no one wants to pay for certain websites only, as someone who runs a website, that would leave me with no one to write for!
—Amanda Blomberg, Lubbock, TX

Equal use and access of the Internet is a right, not a privilege for those who can pay extreme amounts for premium content. All content is fair. Stop this craziness.
—Shannon Moyer, Rochester, MI

This is a terrible blow to anyone who does business over the internet, which is pretty much everyone anymore. Please do not limit internet service or make us pay to access certain sites.
—Cassie McCabe, Macungie, PA

net neutrality is absolutely essential for most people. My family is not financially secure, and having to pay for internet access would put us even deeper into a hole that is already too deep to begin with. Free internet is essential so that i may apply for jobs, since most applications are online. I need it to complete my schooling, and i know many people are dependent on the internet to keep their businesses running. Taking away net neutrality could completely ruin their livelihoods.
—Sydnie Starr, ,

My job relies on the internet. This ruling could ruin my livelihood and tank my career forever.

Please don't do this. Please.
—KG Schmidt, Portland, OR

As a college student and future medical professional not being able to acces or find information that I need for school/to help patients in the future becuase the site it is on does not have the money needed to make itself seen/ I can not afford to purchase a package from my internet provider to be able to see these site would be detrimental to both my education and any future patients I serve. As it stands I can hardly afford to pay for internet from Comcast with their outragious pricing, as well as their newly introduced plan to charge if you go over a preset amount of data used(they are trying this busyness model in Maine and it is finantually crippling when you have many classes online that involve streaming lectures and other audio/video content) and if net neutrality were to be taken away I fear that my, and evey other college student/ small business owner/average user, would be subjected to astronomical fees which would become such a hinderance it would come down to paying for groceries mor paying comcast so I can have access to my online classes. It should also be taken into consideration that this would undoubetly increase prices for online college courses, as these colleges would end up having to pay more to have their classes be visible and accesable online, which at the moment are much more affordable and give more people in lower income brackets the ability to afford to further their education. This bill would be crippling to accesable and affordable higher education, and would undo all of the work that has been going into making college something everyone can afford an access.
—Colbie Wilson, Berwick, ME

—Shawna, Spokane, WA

This is a way for all ISPs to limit our control on our content. If there is a negative review on a website for them, they can make the website pay higher prices, thus being censorship. The way they have censored it? Pay up, or lose visitors due to wait times.

Fuck you bunch of control freaks, internet spreads ideas and information faster and more aggressively than ever before and you feel like you need control over it.
—Nora Vos, ,

Destroying Net Neutrality will have several adverse side-effects. Firstly, innovation will be utterly destroyed. All those new, developing web services will not be able to create a solid footing, for their internet speed will be cut down to a fifth so people can watch Netflix. I mean, this new service could be absolutely revolutionary and become the next Google, but not if people won't even visit it due to how slow the web page is. Secondly, it will force existing services to increase the amount of advertising they show in order to purchase priority over other sites. This will, in turn, deter potential web users, this making advertisements increase in a vicious cycle. And thirdly, you're giving control of the majority of people's news outlet to a company. What if a news story comes out incriminating the CEO of Comcast? What will stop him from removing priority from the news site and making it impossible to load? What if the CEO decides he doesn't like homosexuals, and downs the priority of any website affiliated with that? You're advocating censorship by giving them control over priority.

The internet should be free!! some of us need it to keep contacts with friends or family! charging us will only make us quit using it therefore they lose money
—Megan Kawakami, Belton, MO

Net Neutrality is incredibly important, and I would have to say that it's likely those that would oppose it do not have the peoples' best interests at heart. The internet's power comes from the fact that it's information is open and accessible to all who seek it. To take that away is to attack freedom of information, and we all know where that leads, and it's nowhere good.
—Anthony Woodkey, Circle Pines, MN

As a freelance and independent contract worker, I do a lot of work from home. The internet needs to be equal and available to everyone, not just the mega corporations that can afford an unfair share. Please reconsider net neutrality.

This is a clear violation of First Amendment rights. Forcing people to pay more for access to certain websites is discriminatory to the less-fortunate. This is unacceptable. Shame on the US Government. For a nation that prides itself on personal liberty, it consistently makes equal access to the ability to speak more and more difficult for the less-fortunate. THIS IS NOT OKAY, WHO THE HELL THOUGHT IT WAS OKAY. YOU SHIT BAGS THE INTERNET IS NOT TV. CHANGE THIS NOW OBAMA,
—Ayy, San Antonio, TX

What else is the point of having internet? The ability to freely access unsolicited information. If one must pay for the easiest access, it will only result in ever-rising prices to do things that should simply be free. Many private school institutions are run through the internet, and for someone to have to pay for an unalienable right such as education is simply ludicrous. You might say they could just go to public school, but almost every class in a public schooling environment uses the internet (sites such as webassign, blackboard, and turnitin). The internet is also a vital source of communication, how many people's jobs will very likely require an email address. If a decision was made at a moment's notice and needed to reach the employees immediately, how would that reach them? Surely not a MASSIVE group text? Of course not, texts are informal and, for the most part, sloppy. Internet Neutrality is the best solution for the populous, because, without increasing bandwidth, many people will begin to pay for faster internet, and as a result have about the same speed, just .00001 seconds faster, and those who can't pay, internet will be basically nonexistent.
—Jason Williams, Richardson, TX

Internet should be accessible to everyone, not just those who can afford it.
—Kaitlin Thune, Mount Vernon, IA

This isn't a randomly generated thread to spam your inbox. I sincerely hope you take the time to actually read this through and bring back net neutrality. Setting up regulations like this will make the internet operate like big businesses today, allowing media moguls like facebook and youtube to operate normally while cutting down the opportunity for new sites such as personal blogs and recretional sites that have only recently started. Setting up barriers like this is shamelessly irresponsible, and a direct action AGAINST the people who want to browse at their leisure. It's been said that the internet is the largest scale experiment in an anarchic society, yet as it has proven to this date, the internet can accomplish great things. It connects people in ways thought impossible before. Don't set rules in restrictions in place to the fastest furnace of new ideas and innovation the world has ever seen. Protect the freedom of the internet, and push net neutrality back to the top.

—Nel Deszcz, Sound Beach, NY

STOP THE MADNESS. SAVE NET NEUTRALITY.
—Lindsey Haynes, Lisbon, OH

You will effectively disable the most powerful vessel of communication between parties within and without the United States. Should we be restricted and monitored in the same vein as a communist dictatorship in the interest of making money for corporations? The answer is no.
—Garrett Leonnig, Milliken, CO

The USA, a country that I was once proud to call my home and native land, has just committed a grievious action against its citizens. Our economy is still struggling, more people are on government assistance than ever before, and are now being forced to pay extra for something that should be available to all. The rest of the world is laughing at us, and this born and raised US citizen is laughing with them. If I could afford to leave this wannabe 3rd world country, I would. Voting does nothing. Politicians say whatever they want to get elected. Money seems the only thing that is capable of speech anymore.
—Anya, Cranston, RI

Maybe China should take a page out of our books with this one they would love this idea. I feel like this infringes on our right to information, just saying. Just another way for the government and big wig corporations to control who sees what news about our country and the world.
—Madeleine Bray, Columbus, OH

This shouldn't even be an issue, and the fact it shows is repulsive to me
—Wendy Hockstein, Chicago, IL

Please restore net neutrality. This is very important to me. I am a 16 year old homeschooler who uses the internet to run a small business for my art, this would kill that. Do something good for America and RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!
—Joanna, Millersburg, PA

I hate you, government.
—Megan, Powder Springs, GA

This is the worst idea I've ever heard; give the rich more money while the rest of us are deprived of an everyday tool? Nah
—Faye morris, ,

pls
—Allison, Oglesby, IL

The internet is for free exchange of whatever information users wish, and the beauty of it is that any user can put what information they want on it. If the companies that provide access get to choose who's information we can see by who can pay, they take away the entire point of the internet - which is to empower individuals to share what they feel is important to them. They shouldn't have to pay to share that.
—Alec Schmidt, Hillsdale, NY

—Mary Wright, Pontiac, MI

Restore net neutrality!
—Erin Gray, Portland, OR

I like my internet the way it is
—Bre Jenkins, Louisville, KY

This move will hurt small online businesses who can't afford to pay a premium. Treat broadband like a communications service.
—Sian Green, ,

The internet in Australia is already decades behind the infrastructure/speeds of the U.S.A. and Europe, with the death of Net Neutrality it could only hinder us more and only lead to a class system of those rich enough to view the Internet as it is now, free and accessible, and those unable to do so. Missing out on a vast quantity of human culture that has rapidly evolved to adopt the Internet into our daily lives and basic functions like entertainment, purchases, work, social connectivity and more. Viva la Net Neutrality.
—Michael Greenham, , stop this!!!

—Zoe Willis, Louisville, KY

This is dumb. What are you trying to prove by doing this? We won't stand for this. We won't conform to your stupid rules. You underestimate how much my generation cares about the internet.
—Jordan Stafford, Statesboro, GA

The internet is a free place, not another thing to take over and charge. Stop being greedy for 5 seconds and realize how much the internet can change the world for the better.
—Jen, Apple Valley, CA

Stop this foolishness. Bring back Net Neutrality! If we want to browse sites on our own time, let us! What's it to you as ISPs that should govern our lives? We already have other government agencies to deal with, we don't need another blockade to browse whatever we please!
—Maverick Ignus, Fort Wayne, IN

Are we seriously going to let something like this happen?
—Andy Valladares, San Jacinto, CA

The internet as a whole is so beneficial to the whole human race. Please treat it as such.
—Lauren Rodger, Jupiter, FL

Internet neutrality is needed!
—Zoe Petersen, Salt Lake City, UT

Bring back net neutrality please
—Timtim, New York, NY

Please don't take away people's freedom online. My family cannot pay the extra right now, and a lot of the websites I use will probably fall under the 'you have to pay more to use these' umbrella. And a lot of those websites are safe spaces for me. Please don't eliminate that from my life, of from the lives of those like me.
—, Minneapolis, MN

The internet saves lives, many of us have friends here that we only interact with here. This fountain of information is our right. Don't take this away.
—Nik Pellegrini, Boca Raton, FL

Seriously? After the enormous public backlash, this still goes through? Restore net neutrality. Serve the mass, not the wealthy.
—Jonathan Sullivan, Boca Raton, FL

This is NOT okay. There are so many people that use the internet as a means of business who are strapped of cash enough as it is. DON'T make this worse for those of us that are ALREADY struggling.

—Sadie, Flint, MI

Internet isn't a privilege, it's become important for modern living. Instead of looking at what benefits your pockets, think of the people. We need net neutrality. Censoring for monetary gain is not only unethical, it is gross.
—Christian, South Portland, ME

The Internet was created as an education tool, used to connect colleges and universities with each other across the country. The Internet is a huge resource for education, job searching, and creative outlets. Please protect the rights of all users. Restore Net Neutrality.

—Alex Noneyabus, ,

Please restore net neutrality because the internet is comprised of sites that the people make (Internet Service Providers don't make the websites!), so it should be fair that ISPs don't get to choose what websites we get better access to. The internet is made by the people so it should be for the people.
—Sarah Alvarez, Waldorf, MD

This is a violation of our rights. Stop this ridiculousness.
—Alexis Vaughn, Lompoc, CA

Individual sections of the internet are not to be portioned up and served at discriminatory rates at the whim of the provider. I am paying an internet service provider for the service of providing access to the internet, not for the privilege of controlling the extent of that access with a flip of a switch to extort more money from users at a whim. Reinstate net neutrality, for the sake of the future of human communications. Thank you.

You're discriminating against people with lower incomes, largely the black community. Who's "racist" now?
—, Canton, GA

The internet is the main focal point or creative and academic minds everywhere.If you limit the internet, you limit the great minds of America. Some people spend most of their life on the internet. People keep up family communications over the internet. You're telling me you're willing to make it harder for some people to live just because your want your damn money. It's Ludacris. It's also as simple as It's OUR INTERNET. Just because the cable company wants to make a buck by using their authority at the fcc and taking something that belongs to everyone and ruining it. Well I'd call that vandalism.
—Kotashadowwolf, Vacaville, CA

What makes the internet a special place is that it's an even playing ground with limitless opportunities. Allowing companies like Verizon and Comcast to strip away that freedom destroys the internet not only as a place of social interaction but one of business as many professionals rely on the internet for work!
—Vance Berk, Houston, TX

Don't let this happen
—Marie-Christin Rohmann, ,

I can smell you
—Morgan Freeman, Waterbury, CT

As a freelancer artist, it would crush me if I had to pay for using the internet, therefore making it much more difficult to share my art pieces and also view other freelancers work. Also, I interact with others through certain sites where we roleplay or just play around, it would be extremely hard to contact them through the same means if we had to pay to use the internet. There are so many other factors that you have not considered of (such as people who's jobs are very dependent on the internet, and who's jobs are very dependent on people viewing/visiting their websites and such.)
—Soho Park, ,

You're discriminating against people with lower incomes, largely the black community. Who's "racist" now?

—, Carrollton, GA

This violates our basic rights and I will not stand for this.
—Kaden Roman, Danbury, CT

I am a freelance artist and an online college student. As someone who sells their art and services online, I cannot afford additional fees for internet usage. As a student, the extra time it would take me to upload my projects and assignments and tests/quizzes, participate in online lectures and discussions, and use my online student resources will be incredibly inconvenient and harmful to my educational experience. I'm positive there are millions out there just like me. This is completely ridiculous. Please do not get rid of net neutrality.
—Brittany D Scullion, Southlake, TX

Thank you.
—Michelle Wu, San Francisco, CA

Everyone should have equal access to information. Open access to the internet should be preserved. It should not be up to the cable companies to decided what we can and cannot see based on who pays them the most money.
—Marilyn Weiss, Madison, OH

This will disadvantage a great percentage of americans who will be unable to compete in our world today. Access to internet is how so many people from disadvantaged backgrounds are able to compete even with limited resources.
—Olivetta Uradu, Russell, KY

Please restore Net Neutrality!
—Jessica Platz, Fort Lee, VA

The separation of classes has got to stop. This will kill lower income people trying to have a start-up business. As more business is conducting via the internet, this will effectively destroy any hopes of lower to lower-middle class people trying to build a business. Effectively, this boosts the massive corporations and kills small businesses America has been so adamant about protecting. Don't let this happen.
—Alex Powell, Mansfield, TX

Please do not take the last options of information flow away from us!!! This keeps friendships, relationships and basically billions of people tied together!
—Lili Kulcsár, ,

Net Neutrality is vital to the internet. Allowing ISP's to control what can and can't be seen by restricting internet speeds is infringing on the right to freedom of speech and freedom of expression. Please reclassify internet as a telecommunications service.
—Wesley Prescott, Flower Mound, TX

I don't want to pay for faster connections on the Internet. The internet should be a open source where everyone has the chance to access websites at equal speed, not a cash - grab for companies that want more money, or want to put more traffic into their survives online instead of their competitors. Let us have the freedom to choose what services we receive from what site we want to receive them from.

—Sarah Gleisner, ,

As an artist who does all of my work online, allowing companies to put a price on internet speed and access to websites would cut me off entirely from my audience and limit my own exposure to other up and coming artists in my field. Please don't let my community be disassembled so that companies like Verizon and Comcast can make more money than they already do.
—Ellen Dreher, Roanoke, VA

I don't want to live in a world where the only platform that ever feels equitable is put into the hands of corporations that have a vested interest in it being less equal.
—Haley Hughes, Oklahoma City, OK

It shouldn't be like this. Internet by itself has become a basic human right and trying to monopolize on that is already absurd, it's going to ruin small businesses.
—Charlie Garrett, Clovis, CA

Don't ruin the internet please
—Esmee, ,

Please knock this stuff off and act like you give a damn about people in this country instead of corporations. Corporations are entities, not people. People are not profits either. Please please please keep net neutrality alive!

This is going to essentially punish those who are less financially sound than others, as well as hinder the growth of small businesses who cannot afford to pay extra for their pages to load quickly. The internet has become a source of knowledge for the entire world, and by limiting access through slow loading speed, it's denying access to information.
—Sami-Jo Ross, Brooklyn, MD

I am a college student so fast internet access is vital for my classes. If Net Neutrality isn't restored, this will impact my and hundreds of thousands of other students across America. Please make the internet equal for everyone again.
—Maria Miller, Duluth, MN

Okay speaking on this matter this does not just affect homeowners who need the internet but the children as a whole as well. Since children and teens need the internet in order to access the information they need for school this severely limits their abilities to learn and get good grades. Please put the internet neutrality back in order. This doesn't just affect the home-owners. This affects children as well.

Hi. This is Emma from New York. I'm one of NY state senators constituents. I strongly support net neutrality and I'm asking you to urge the FCC to reclassify internet providers under Title II, and sign on to the Internet Freedom Letter being circulated by Sen. Angus King. Reclassification is the only way to actually establish the neutral and non-discriminatory internet that the FCC itself claims to be committed to. Thank you!
—Emma Givney, Woodside, NY

As a photographer, my website, and other sites used for blogging, is available for anyone to see and lets potential clients see my work. Usually if people have to pay for a preview before even buying my services, they are NOT going to do it. By limiting websites, I will not get as many jobs and could fail as a photographer.
—Rachael Abell, West Chicago, IL

I think the decision to kill net neutrality is un-American and unconstitutional.
—Marie G., Saint Paul, MN

Please please please don't tax the internet. It's for communication purposes, and without it, many people would be in the dark on everything.

—Walter espinoza, Austin, TX

It's the Internet, a place where everyone should be able to be inter-connected equally.
—Mike B, Pittsburgh, PA

This is basically setting up people for failure. What about all the college students that use the internet for basically all of their classes? This pretty much puts in place a blocker for anyone that is in the lower classes. What about those of us who are trying to go to college to get an education and try to be able to make a decent amount. You're setting us up for failure.
—Sherry Reprogle, High Ridge, MO

You have not listened to the people and instead sided with business. You are a failure to America, and throw your own citizens under the big business bus. I hope you all get deported.

Why is this a thing!? Why do we have to fight for the freedom of something that ISN'T JUST LIMITED TO THE UNITED STATES! I'm embarrassed to live in a country that thinks they need to turn everything into something exclusively for the wealthy. You should be ashamed as well.
—Cameo Dorais, Poultney, VT

Capitalism does not mean allowing monopolies. Too many areas already have no choice in internet services because the carrier in those areas have a monopoly. Killing net neutrality will only make that worse. That is NOT capitalism. It's oligarchy.
—Jennifer Samson, Mountain Lakes, NJ

—Paola Samaniego, San Ramon, CA

Ya'll need to think about the people who don't have fat wallets—who won't be able to afford the internet as it is now. Sure, it's easy to rule out something like Net Neutrality when you don't struggle with money, but by taking away Net Neutrality, you're taking away access to information so that people can be educated and use their resources to learn how to make this country better. Propaganda shouldn't be the only way that people learn how things are—that would make the American government no better than a communist country; essentially, all the people who would not be able to afford access to all sorts of internet would be subjected to only biased viewpoints on issues that may not even be relevant to the individual's or country's welfare. Not everyone will be able to afford access to information, and ultimately, this decision will hurt the country as a whole. Please bring back Net Neutrality if you really value the welfare of the country and your reputations.

The internet is a worldwide source where people have educated themselves on countless concepts, communicate to people around the world, and come together as one. I do not believe that we should pay for something so important, especially at a time where money is running thin.
—Margherita Solla-Isea, Miami, FL

I personally cannot comprehend the reprimandable actions being put into place by government officials without any thought of how unjust and negative their own actions are. INFORMATION IS FREE. The Internet is a place for information to be shared and learned. Also, cat videos. But in a world of Wal-Mart and the failing small business let's not put any more nails in the coffin of small business. Some small business rely on the Internet to stay afloat. To survive. To feed their families. They can't afford to pay Comcast and AT&T, who don't need it, just to be able to stay alive. And it's unfair and unjust to make them.

Don't you take enough fucking money from us already? You need more money, America? Stop spending it all on militarizing our police and over producing weaponry. The world gets it. America is defended, good for you. But let's start actually spending it on what citizens need? Or is that a concept too difficult for our government to understand? Maybe a legitimately nutritious school lunch program? Less calories doesn't mean more healthy. It means fried burger patties with less meat and cement like nacho cheese on over salted chips and pasteurized milk and yellow over cooked green beans. Or maybe we could help our homeless? Help get them education so they can care for themselves? Just some ideas. Making us pay to get on certain sites and all that bullshit isn't gonna solve any problems. Actually use tax payer money for what we need it for.
—Olivia Scheufler, Saint Charles, IL

Cut the oligarchal bullshit out, we pay your salary, not these giant companies, especially today in Americas current corporate tax climate. The internet was created as a way to share information, not for some company, especially ones as shitty as Verizon and comcast, to make money off of.

As a freelance artist, this would affect my career immensely.Not only my career, but my social life, and most importantly (well to the government, anyways.) My education. Since I'm fourteen, live with my father, who barely makes enough to cover all the basic needs, there is no way I, or he, could pay for faster internet. I think it would be nice if we (the u.s.) could keep things equal for once, because we've been so great at that in the past. (P.s. RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY
—Darcy, ,

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Anne, ,

America has no right whatsoever to impose this legislation, as it will majorly affect other people in other countries. You have no jurisdiction over my country, the internet is not your plaything, it is the world wide web for a reason and it wasn't even invented by some American so piss off.

Dear Mr Wheeler, You will likely be receiving if hundreds if not thousands of these notes all expressing some measure of outrage or pleads for restoring what this email implies. I'm here more to talk about the greater implications of what these laws mean for our society as a whole, and what America has come to represent. This is not an attempt at persuasion, or debate through rhetoric, but rather a simple exercise in the education that America has deigned to give it's citizens with the ideal that they will inspire reform and social progress. If this was a lie to begin with then the United States has wasted billions of dollars for what could easily be replaced by an indoctrination program to obey the whims of those who hold power; the rich. My studies in Political Science do not give me any misconceptions about the methods of control and leadership in humanity. American politics was founded on the sole principle that we must prevent vice, as outlined in the Federalist papers and executed in the Separation of powers. Yet in the present day we see in this case that this is clearly no longer the case. In the inflation of the government that has progressively grown since the establishment of this ideal has been counterproductive to this goal, and it is clear that the sins of the Gilded Age where corruption runs rampant, and big business once again threatens to ruin the economy, and American society. My reasoning for this is two-fold; Marx's prediction that the proletariat to overthrow the bourgeoisie failed in American only because we had the existence of the middle class. The middle class only existed because of entrepreneurs, which, before anti-trust laws, were swallowed up by monopolies. Now that we have a bigger government, big business, though not monopolies, have succeeded in prolonging their life through bail-outs, and their refusal to die disrupts the natural economic pattern of boom and busts. Because of this the American people suffer, and additionally, the government, having relied on the big corporations to survive, becomes sluggish and deaf to the suffering of the very people they were meant to serve. We see clearly here that the government, as it was always seen from the beginnings of the United States, is pitted against the people. This is why we separated the government's power and turned it against itself, to prevent it's growth as an entity that only causes the people to suffer. I do not know the motivations which prompted you to take the job that you did, or what you may think of these points that I have brought up. I am skeptical that you have continued to read through all the way to this point; your job, I imagine, is quite full with more relevant matters. The bottom line is, when corporations and power politics become iron triangles, then there is not much the people can do, and the ideals that have defined America have proven to be nothing more than a lie and we are living in a dystopia. Money is a means of life for all who live here, but for big corporations it becomes the lifeline with which they can threaten to strangle others with, once they become dependent on it. In order to stop their power, their dominion, and their suppression of free voice there needs to be action from people like you. And that is the impact on our society, should this travesty continue. With a biased internet, corporations would be free to give access to people who are loyal to the company, channel corruption into the largest media center now in existence and provide untold amounts of campaigning power to politicians on their payroll, and the voice of democracy will fail. It will be tyranny of the majority, the education and the political awareness of the people will be stymied further than it already is, and we will live in a giant lie that can only be rectified through revolution. This can be stopped here, now, before we find ourselves in another social upheaval, and recent events in Ferguson have already shown that there is much still troubling America's society. We should not add to the troubles of citizens and people pursuing their dream any longer.

—C P, Charlotte, NC

I would like to know the official reasons behind this act. Who came up with this, who passed the word around all these internet providers, why they agreed to this, projected incomes based on this change, if they have a forecast on what they think this will do to the country at large, so on and so forth. i would like to know every little detail, because just springing this on the entire country without much of an official explanation despite what the media does a poor job of covering just doesnt seem right. Nobody wants change this big to just drop from the sky without any warning for one, and two without any idea whats going to happen to people who need the internet the most. Libraries for instance wont be able to keep up with this. many libraries have a computer time limit, and with students needing the internet more and more these days, how will they be able to take care of everything they need to take care of within the time allotted? what about low income families who also need access to the internet, but have to use public portals? i understand that youre trying to milk the citizens for as much money as you can, but all this is just counter-productive. the money you could make by taxing the people who make more money than the general populous could more than make up for what you would gain from milking us... but since you are the ones who dont get taxed, and are eternally greedy, i suppose you want to suck up all our resources as well... I still want a report on what all i asked for in the beginning of this comment.

This cannot happen. ISPs already bleed us dry with subpar service, claiming to be on the cutting edge, and they absolutely will take every opportunity to monetize the Internet. The free sharing of information will flow at the whims of a careless few, and the Internet which has fostered such innovation in so short a time will wither to another overpriced, lackluster commodity. Students need access to sources on the internet. While books are also a great source of of information. The internet allows for readily available up to date information on any topic. This includes college websites, educational journal data-banks, sites for research institutions, YouTube, and various news publishers. These are only a few of the resources. By limiting the amount of access people have to the internet, like cable, it creates a further divide among the social classes. Whoever can afford the most reliable news shall have it. Whoever can afford to access relevant and up to date research shall have it. But what about those who can not afford it? What about students who can't afford to access the research they need? This will further the divide to access education and wage. Education is the key to rising above the line of poverty, and it is already expensive enough. This is another truck of bricks in the wall that is dividing the rich from the poor. Stop the division of class keep net neutrality

—Catalina Santander, Alexandria, VA

This will effect an entire generation of Internet users. The difficulty in even affording an neutral ISP is already so high, why make it worse? This is so big companies can micromanage their income.
—Colton Davenport, Eureka, CA

It would be great if you just would not. Do not do this. I want to keep the internet I already pay for. Not more just to use certain websites. We need SOME freedom in this country of freedom.
—Mary Styles, Lawrenceville, GA

As a fledgling blogger, I'm very concerned about this. If my ISP decided I wasn't "worthy" of their time, I wouldn't have the resources to survive. This is so wrong. Give us our equal opportunity, so that we can make it or break it on our own merits. A tiered internet further privileges those who are already privileged!

Why the actual fuck is the Internet even being considered as something to be limited?
—Jack Clews, , stop messing with my internet you old white wrinkly bastards

—, Wichita, KS

STOP TRYING.
—Zada, ,

Net Neutrality is vitally important to today's world. It allows everyones voice to be heard and knowledge to be spread no matter how poor or rich someone is. Please do not allow this to happen as you will be preventing thousands of people from experiencing the internet as we have so far.
—Erin Benz, Reading, PA

Net neutrality cannot die. Do not let it happen for the good of the people.
—Shane Brandon, Fullerton, CA

This is unAmerican!
—Coral Rudnick, Atco, NJ

Net Neutrality is such an important thing, because the internet is truly the only place where people everywhere in the world can connect. If there is separation on the web due to whoever pays more, than people will no longer be able to connect the way we were meant to.
—Samuel Infante, San Antonio, TX

The internet is a free range place that we shouldn't have to pay extra to get equal access to why are you even considering this?
—Juliana Lemos, West Palm Beach, FL

DON'T DO IT!!!!!!!
—Clarence Greer, Dallas, TX

Net neutrality is ethical and democratic, being against it seems as a way to gaing influence over the oligarchy of the internet providers, because net neutrality is clearly the most correct way to control the flow of data. There is only a single exception to this logic, highly important websites, such as governmental and banks' websites which need to be kept functional for national stability should be a priority. Moreover, applying the net neutrality will make little impact in the economy but it will change a lot the internet for it's users.
—Lipe Lima Carmel, ,

This will kill everything.

—Jennifer Garcia, Gainesville, GA

This isn't what the internet was made for. It was made for equal access. MAKE IT EQUAL! we already pay for internet access. This is just stupid. STOP.
—Whitney Alexander, Fuquay Varina, NC

Without Net Neutrality taking the internet and not making it accessible is ridiculous, it already takes money just to get internet connection. Paying for sites is not okay. This isn't Television, this also isn't communism. Yes communism because in countries where communism exists, so does a cap on the internet where people can't go to certain sites.

—Alanna C., Abington, MA

Having to pay for what sites we want to get on is ridiculous. Can't capitalism leave a good thing alone?
—Amber Murphy, Linden, TN

The internet is such a commonly used thing, that allowing companies to pay for better internet will only monopolize it. If sites are blocked ny big corporations, how are the American people supposed to share their ideas and get information? For those of low income, what will happen if they have to choose between food and internet? Internet has become deeply woven into many lives, homework has become electronic, you can pay bills online, you can even chat with relatives. Why limit that? What good cones of it?
—Eron, Severn, MD

My family is already struggling to make ends meet, how can you expect people to pay more when they can't. My whole family uses different websites, it's unfair that we'd have to pay to view them all. Especially since that narrows traffic to certain sites, where people have their own businesses and shops. It's hurting the economy! Not only will those people who are selling things online have less money, people paying for the websites will also lose money and not be able to buy more things. This is all completely mind boggling as to how this passed!
—Megan Watkins, Overland Park, KS

Are these people crazy! Their trying to get money every possible way! Taking away something that is a form of communication to connect with the world is crazy. You're not taking it but still most people have really tight budgets and can't afford to pay to access more of the internet that is unbelievable that you think this is the right way to get more money. I'm totally outdone.
—Justice, Baton Rouge, LA

get the fuck outta my face with this bullshit
—Angela Kinstler, Newbury Park, CA

If this happens, expect disaster. I highly doubt Anonymous will stand for it, and the US is already in bad shape.
—Weston Willrich, Ortonville, MI holy fuck why is this happening im so done with this country bye

—Lily Medlin, Vero Beach, FL

Our economy is already in a bad enough state, limiting net neutrality can only make it worse. By allowing ISPs to discriminate against certain websites, forcing them to pay to get in the fast lane, you are hurting hundreds, if not thousands of independent businesses which use the internet to reach their customers. There are many small companies which conduct business primarily online. Adding an extra expense to their already limited budget puts them at greater risk of going bankrupt or needing to cut back on the number of employees they have. Furthermore, allowing companies to block or slow down certain websites limits freedom of speech. Many people start up online news sites or activist sites because it is a low cost, highly effective means of voicing their own opinions and ideas. By allowing companies to block or slow down certain sites, you enable them to control what people see and hear about. You limit the exchange of ideas.
—Bethany Laible, Arnold, MD

The internet has been and should be a free place. People's jobs depend on the internet and where cash is already strapped doing this is going to ruin people. This will have people who need the internet to work and live having to chose between groceries or a new tier package form Comcast or whoever to access the sites they need with speed that's conducive to work productivity. ISP's should not be able to limit the sites I see unless I pay them more. This will kill small businesses who can't afford to get onto the faster tier of the internet. America the free my ass.
—Miranda L Carter, Austin, TX

Please don't do this, it would literally ruin lives.
—Abby brannigan, Pascoag, RI

DONT LET IT HAPPEN T_T

This is the dumbest thing ever!! Why do they want us to pay for websites when we already pay for internet?? A bunch of greedy pigs run this country if you ask me.
—Marybeth Nemrie, Columbus Grove, OH

I conduct business online and the fact that this decision could jeopardize my income and livelihood is incredibly discouraging. Please protect us from companies who would take advantage of small business owners in order to make an even greater profit than they already do. This decision will create an even greater gap between those who are wealthy and those that are not, cutting off people with less money from being able to fully utilize what the internet has to offer. It's a sickening and disgusting abuse of power.

The Internet isn't just a source of entertainment, it's a source of communication and learning, especially for those who have no access to public or private education. Taking this away will take away countless opportunities for learning and business. Or maybe that's what big government wants.
—Michelle Weaver, Orem, UT

The internet should be open, that's what makes it great. without net neutrality everything goes downhill, everyone uses the internet, news,police, almost every single country. so removing net neutrality so some american company can make a little money even if it hurts everyone else is so incredibly stupid. we have a good thing here, don't destroy it.

cut the defense budget and the budget of local police. leave the internet alone.
—Matt Marshall, Waterford, NY

I write in hopes that the FCC will understand just how mich harm as oppose to good the ending of net neutrality will be. I as well as many others urge for you to reconsider this decision and allow the internet to continue as is.
—Dan Marly France, Brooklyn, NY

This is a complete outrage. What ever happened to keeping monopolies at bay in this country? Because that is what this is. This is a blatant attack against small businesses who cannot afford the high cost of serving it's users efficiently online. This is an even bigger attack on customers and users as a whole. We are essentially being held hostage in this situation, because who is going to foot the bill of keeping popular websites efficient? The users. The users are what sustain the internet, and if you take away their freedom, our freedom, they will stop at nothing to bypass any obstacle set before them. They will take these companies down, and they will regret their corporate greed.
—Megan Gierasch, Omaha, NE

We need to tell them that there are people who's jobs are online. They struggle to make a living. This will create more problems for than it has to. Making people pay is just wrong.

What the hell?? You seriously think that slowing down the internet for people who don't pay for a subscription onto a website would be better for all of us? Oh wait. Someone said it would be normal speed for those who don't pay, but superspeed for those who do pay for a subscription, right? No. It simply segregates the poor and the rich! Even though I prefer not to talk about the issues between the 99-98% and the 1-2% dilemmas, but you can be sure to expect us to bleed when you prick the fingers of any human being alive today. The internet is a communications service first, an entertainment service second, and finally, a business service thirdly. I like going to twitch(dot)tv and typing my questions to the gamers streaming their games and finding out if the game they're playing is good or not. I like going to youtube and seeing so many great content that many have recorded and submitted. (Though they do like to change the layout from time to time and THAT can get frustrating, but that's a different topic) I like discovering the many fantastic inventions that our future has in store for everyone. Examples would include: Oculus rift, solar roadways, new high-end computers, police wearing cameras, 3D-printed implants, and (my favorite so far) humane medicinal research. To limit a system solely based on and for communication would limit... well... communication.

As a student in our evolving world, technology is an important part in my life. It is not just me either; Every student I know uses the internet as well. In classes, teachers and students are encouraged to use the internet to further our education in ways that our current resources cannot allow. How can we get a proper education in this high-tech world with companies putting a price on internet connections? The companies should not be allowed to influence something that harms students' education. I won't say anymore (even though there is plenty more to say).

Considering that our government is run by baby boomers, I don't think you old folks understand how important the internet and net neutrality is to my generation, especially students. This isn't a bunch of teenagers killing time and watching movies. While there is certainly a demographic of internet users like that, most people my age use the internet as a tool for research and the dissemination of information. The recent outcome of Verizon's court case would severely restrict our access to this information, effectively crippling the next generation of Americans ability to further our education.

I am a tax paying, hard working, sensible, American citizen. I am tired of big bully businesses running and ruining every aspect of not only this country but this entire planet. The internet shouldn't be available only for those who can afford it. Any half hearted, half brained person can see that. It's a free fucking space for entertainment, learning, teaching, socializing, and maintaining a steady relationships with loved ones abroad. I demand Net Neutrality restored.
—Tyler Ya, Hope Mills, NC

This is ludicrous.

—Thao Dao, Wichita, KS

Please do not get rid of net neutrality, it will end in poor results if it is done!
—Liam Corcoran, Omaha, NE

Fix this shit. This isn't American.
—Angelina, Lawton, OK

The dictation of the internet is one of the dumbest things humanly imaginable in this time period. This is anti-consumer because now companies have the power to limit what we want to do/see based on what THEY think is right. That is sickening and wrong every way imaginable. The people in charge of this decision have no idea what they're doing because lobbyists tell them what to say. That isn't a good system, that's systematically broken and leaves no hope for the future.Net Neutrality mad everybody equal on the basis that anybody could access anything at anytime; with that gone companies will make people pay extra in order to have a better connection and leave the other people who might not be able to afford the premium in the dust. EA was considered the worst company of 2013 because one of the reasons was limiting what consumers started out with and then made them pay for the full package which is what the elimination of Net Neutrality can let companies do.

—Stephen Webber, New York, NY

I am a student who is just trying to get through high school and into a good college. My family doesn't have a lot of money right now. If Net neutrality doesn't pass and companies start charging per website, that will severely impact a lot of my schoolwork. A lot of my teachers post links to videos and pages online. I do a ton of work on top of being in my school's drama productions. I can't spend hours waiting for one site to load, or have to pay in order for it to load at all! And I don't want there to come a time where as a college student I'll have to decide between buying food for the month or paying for a website and starving. Not one of these cable companies has any idea how idiotic and cruel their decision is. They need to be stopped.

Quit with the greed. Instead of worrying about the damn internet, you worry about the state of this country. How about you focus on ferguson, or how your going to fix the national debt, or about education for children, or focus on basic human rights? You worry about lining your own pockets rather than doing your job. Quit with this horseshit and actually worry about something that matters.

—Travis Harrell, Marietta, GA

You have to realize how damaging this can be to small businesses such as my own and that of others. There are tons of us independent names in the creative sector that already have a hard time with growing and establishing our businesses and clientele. By supporting the decision to do away with net neutrality, you are making it virtually impossible for any of us breaking into the creative sector to succeed in this world. I can only imagine how this decision can and will affect other business owners and users alike. Make the right decision and let us have our net neutrality. Thank you.

The elimination of Net Neutrality silences the voices of the people. We cannot continue to allow the government to pry in to even our most basic outlets of unbiased, even unconventional means of media and communication. It is infringing on our basic rights as American citizens. Rectify the verdict. RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY.
—Cassandra Hoggins, Chebanse, IL

Your commission is destroying the Internet, something that should be available for everyone to use for your own selfish desires of making money off the poor. If this does not stop you will incite the wrath of every Internet user in the United States of America. The Internet was made for the purpose of free browsing, why try and take that away?
—Ashley, Lubbock, TX

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

I am a high school teachers that works with low income and immigrant students, something that I am constantly discussing with them is how lucky they are to live in a country where everyone has an equal opportunity to be successful. Recently though I have begun to wonder if that is really true in our country. There is an alarming trend of the divide between the rich and the poor is ever growing. As a teacher I also know that knowledge is the most important tool to try to lessen this divide. I work in a school where my kids go without many many things that other students just a town over have in abundance. This brings me to the internet, the internet is truly a place still of equality, anyone can create, share, express and educate on it. Anyone can have a voice or start a movement or live a dream with billions of people. It is amazing. We are a country that is supposed to be about freedom and equality, we simply MUST NOT take another step away from our most sacred values. Please do not make me a liar to my students. You must not doing anything to further create the "two" Americans, let's live up to our values and our promise to all our citizens.

—Rafaella, ,

come on, this kind of thing is never going to take. stop trying.
—Alexander Schnetgoecke, Fort Bragg, CA

Please.
—Sydney, Altoona, IA

This is crazy and I feel the only voices that have been heard so far have been some big companies, not the people, i.e. the majority of internet users. Losing Net Neutrality is losing part of our freedom. Stop this now.
—Isaac Heflin, Albuquerque, NM

Net Neutrality is VITAL to define what the Internet is supposed to do right now, and this is just killing it. Without it, the Internet would become a monopoly for the richest company! You can't do that!
—Ian Ettiene, ,

This is sad, the internet shouldn't be controlled in such a way. It's already expensive to just get internet set up let alone having to pay for "fast lanes".
—Elizabeth Resler, Denver, CO

I already live a lifestyle where I pay extra to continue playing games I have bought. I cannot afford to play video games online if this keeps up.
—Eugene Augustine, Lawton, OK

America is becoming a place where only the rich can have their voice heard. The internet is a way for people to connect and share ideas and also to learn new things. It should not be a luxury item in this day and age. Information and knowledge is right at our fingertips, so why rob people of knowledge just because they can't afford the best internet? Net neutrality matters because the internet is the only place where people can voice their opinions and be heard by others across the world instantly. Stop taking our right to free speech away.
—Abby Smith, Henrico, VA

This is monumental. It will affect your children and my children.
—Rick Kuperman, New York, NY

Now that I think about it, I am doing a research project and most of my research is coming from sites that will run slow and cannot afford to be apart of this whole new "system" you've approved. The fact that I soon may not be able to do research properly and correctly is- just a hard thing to accept. Honestly, this is the most ignorant decision made, FCC.
—Bethany Hall, Waterloo, IA

It saddens me that the Internet is not considered a national and worldwide freedom. Making it harder to access the Internet will not only inconvenience businesses, but disconnect the world.
—Victoria Beasley, Wichita, KS

I'm a fifteen year old girl. Companies don't need to be controlling anymore of my life. They already have a say in my body, schooling, and government. Please don't have them take my internet.
—Lauren Lee, Milton, GA

Fix this.
—Julian, Coos Bay, OR

As a soon to be eighteen year old, I'm going to be looking into colleges, and I'm home schooled. So most of my research for school, not to mention life planning, relies heavily on the internet, I'm also a digital artist. I highly enjoy going on my art sites too see artists like me posting wonderful art, I don't want to ask my parents to pay more just so I can enjoy my hobbies and have the resources for my education. The internet should be free for everybody. I don't want the government telling me I'm not allowed to have access to my sites just because I can't pay for them. I say no. Let the internet be free for all.

Because isn't it enough that there's a HUGE poverty gap in this country already draining the people the money is being sucked from without this? Or no, let's just let the entire economy system collapse around us by charging them just a little bit more for basic survival. That's a good idea, too.
—Dana M Wright, Belleville, IL

I already pay enough for what I get please don't make me pay more I can't afford to pay it.
—William Gerety, Meriden, KS

This change's negatives will outweigh the positives BY FAR.
—Jiayi Ruan, East Setauket, NY

The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening.
—Alexandra Sigelfeldt, ,

Restore net neutrality rules.
—Ainoha Emms Medina, ,

This is moronic and greed at it's finest. The internet is meant for many things, amongst them is business and communication. If small businesses are hindered and communications dentured because those of lower income can't access the "premium" website, the division between rich and poor will be more prominent. I shouldn't have to pay a premium to buy from a small business or a large one. I shouldn't have to pay a premium to contact someone else on a larger site. I pay enough to my ISP, why shall a pay more for other sites that should be free, paid via advertising?

No company should be able to have this much control over the people who pay them for their services. This is another ridiculous attempt at relegating individuals to a class system based on what they are able to pay. What about this speaks to a democratic republic?
—Rachel Zimmerman, Renton, WA

I bet this only gets you more money. Good thing that your children and grandchildren will forever suffer because you were greedy. I don't think America is the home for the free anymore.

The internet is the home to so many relationships. So many people take to the internet when they are to afraid to face the stresses and PRESSURES of society. I personally have met such wonderful people over the internet and the only way i can communicate with them is through the internet without ridiculous charges. Peoples businesses bloom and flourish through the internet, teens use it for school and yes, sometimes it can be harmful but the positives of the internet are so much stronger than the negatives. And the best thing about it is that its FREE. I don't see how anyone is going to want to use it if it includes charges and that would basically be putting the world back into the stone age.

You're disabling our rights as humans under the American Constitution.
—Serina Six, Bronx, NY

Loss of net neutrality is going to kill our economy and it's already in a state where it can't take a hit like this. There's so much the internet can do for people and limiting it is only going to hurt and make things here worse.
—Julie Francois, Arlington, TX

Net neutrality is absolutely vital to freedom of speech. Otherwise, we'll be no better off than the people in communist or socialist nations whose internet is censored. Ours will just be censored based on who can pay the most. The views on the internet now are diverse and represent everybody. If net neutrality dies, we'll be seeing what big business wants us to see and nothing more. This is destroying our freedom of speech, because if this happens, only those who can afford it will be allowed to have their views easily and quickly accessible to the masses online. In short, this is unacceptable.

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!!! Don't let big business monopolies ruin the internet experience for everyone. This needs to stop now if we are to keep a free and open internet. Internet is a communications service that nearly everyone in the world uses or has access to. Some people depend on the internet for their income on small independent sites. Rulings like the one from the appeals court will hurt these independent workers, and take away the only income they have simply cause the website they use for business cant pay the exorbitant fees these ISPs are gonna start charging. What are you people thinking? Is money the only thing that motivates people anymore? Are you only concerned with lining your own pockets at the expense of millions of people's welfare and livelihood? As an independent artist and costume maker i depend solely on the internet as my source of business and income. If access to my pages and advertisements for my business are cut off or restricted to the majority of users, i will cease to be able to keep myself financially sustained. This is wrong! You should be ashamed of yourselves for even letting this issue get this far. RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY NOW!!
—Justin Willie Ivey, Beaverton, OR

LISTEN HERE MAN INTERNET IS LIFE AND IT MAKES ME HAPPY. THIS IS MY SHIT, ONE OF THE REASONS IM HERE, YOU TAKE THIS AWAY YOU TAKE AWAY A LIFE. I AINT GONNA PAY FOR PORNHUB OR TUMBLR OR NONE OF THAT SHIT JUST SO YOU CAN GET MONEY, I ALREADY PAY FOR COLLEGE WHICH IS LIKE 15,000+ EVERYTHING I NEED PLUS I WANNA LIVE A GOOD LIFE WITH FREE AND FAST WI-FI BUT THAT SHIT AINT FREE SO BACK THE FUCK UP AND LEMME HAVE MY INTERNET FOR FUCKS SAKE IT'S ALL I GOT NIGGA!

—Zoe, Harrisonburg, VA

As a future computer scientist, I do not want the medium from which I learned my passion to be dismantled or limited in any form. I have been lucky to live in a world where the internet was a neutral space, with no borders; where I could make my own webpage at any time and communicate with people from all walks of life. I see now that I have taken this wonderful privilege for granted, but I hope that future generations will be able to do the same. Keep the internet neutral!
—Amber Wetzel, Savage, MN

This is despicable
—Mitchel smigel, Jamestown, NY

To have it where the internet is no longer open and people have to pay individual companies to go on particular websites, as well as having "internet fast lanes" is a disgrace. The internet is a free flowing source of ideas and individuality, not an extra way for corporations to gain extra income.
—Harry Sargent, ,

Really? We already have to pay for internet access at home. You're making America look bad. Stop it.
—Georgina Cantu, San Antonio, TX

Network Filtration is not an answer, Net Neutrality is important for the shear fact that it is a form of free speech/press as well as a liberty of entertainment, and thus, should be protected by our First Ammendment rights, not censored, filtered, or hamperred by Government establishments.
—, Weston, OH

keep it all FREE. Not in the hands of greedy companies and the wealthy.
—Sara Przybylski, Columbia, MO

The internet isn't entertainment only as the TV is, it is a source of data and information and this will affect people's performance in their jobs and in children's schools. If the government wants money, actually fix some problems, don't create new ones to fix.
—Sofia, Canton, GA

I cannot stand for this. I can hardly believe you're going to let something meant to be free and open to all another fatality of negative capitalism. This is one thing I thought would never become another industry. Please, please don't let this happen.
—Stephen Jeter, Frisco, TX

I find it incredibly unfair that, when I can already barely afford to pay my bills and feed myself working 40+ hours a week, I should have to also pay to access certain websites, a lot of which I visit frequently. I also find it unfair that, on a platform that is meant to allow users freedom to create and browse as they please, some sites can be blocked by providers. Don't let the fat cats keep limiting our rights; restore Net Neutrality for us little guys.

I'm sick of this. Everywhere I look, almost everything requires money. And every person I know has at least at some point used the internet as an escape. I'm am SO DONE with the government trying to make everything about money. Why do they feel the need to caste everything? We already have limited access to HEALTH CARE, of all things, (seeing as it is so expensive), can we PLEASE not do that with the internet? It is very, very unnecessary.

Bad USA. Bad. Go sit in the corner and think about what you've done. Cockheads.
—Luke, Oldsmar, FL

If net neutrality ends, I will no longer use the internet and be a part of what puts the parties involved out of business. The Internet is meant to be a free, safe space for the youth of today, and it is quickly becoming the way we connect to those in areas all over the globe or in our own backyard. Think about this before the final nail is in.
—Nicole Aleman, Miami, FL

By removing net neutrality, you're ruining businesses that rely on internet publicity, ruining people's way of coping by reaching out to loved ones across the world, ruining lives for people who aren't able to leave their homes, cutting off news and information sources of worldly and political matters, and even putting a big bullet into those who need the internet to make money to pay for bills and put food on the table. We pay for internet services, not for you to put a collar and leash around our necks just because you want to make more money we don't have to give you.
—Sandra Huynh, ,

I live within a family of 6, working-class. With so many people out there (including me) who can't afford these "fast lanes" on the internet, life is brought to a standstill. What about schools who don't have the extra money to pay for these faster services? Do we let our children's education become a downgrade? Do we let our future slide?

FUCK CLASSISM
—Zachary Zyskowski, Boulder, CO

Sir Tim Berners-Lee, the creator of the World Wide Web and the framework upon which the modern internet is based, is credited as saying "This is for everyone" in reference to the Web. This quote, to many people around the world, is the basis upon which the internet operates; Free at general point of use, and at cost at the discretion of individual sites. This is how the internet has functioned for the whole of it's existence. To change this now, or ever, would be a travesty and a perversion of the very ideals that the Web was created under. The Internet should remain free, for everyone, forever.
—James Duggan, ,

We pay enough for the internet. We shouldn't have to pay more for what the internet stands for. Knowledge should be free, thus I feel the internet should be as well... so hell no to this lack of net neutrality. We have enough of a problem with this; Healthcare, housing, finances... This is the last thing that is given equality to all families across the country.
—Becky, Vernal, UT

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I’d rather not be limited even more by someone else’s greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Rheanna Labossiere, ,

We the People of the United States of America never even got a say in this; and we are the people who it is affecting. How will this help rebuild our dwindling middle class? Eventually the money from all of the "poor" people will run dry and all those rich people will be forced to fight to the death over the last of your money bags; but then where will that leave us? How will college students apply for jobs? Through the library computers? What if a child actually uses the internet for something other than porn, like learning foreign languages? The internet is much more than Facebook and Tumblr. Some people make a living on the internet; but who actually cares about people trying to better their lives with the harsh hand they were dealt. Who cares about the little guy anyways?

—Ronnie Pontin, ,

People rely on the internet for a lot. For some this is how they make their living, whether it be online shops or advertising. Many college and high school students require fast service to be able to meet expectations for assignments and get sources. Some people research health issues, contact people far away, create, finance, etc. Point being that capitalizing on this is as down low as capitalizing off of libraries.

As a content producer on the internet, a maker of videos and a blog, I am extremely concerned about net neutrality, and the uncaring corporations who have struck it down, despite all the public backlash. A free internet is what has made the internet, and possibly the world, great. Take that away, and at the end of the day, are we really better, free-speech wise, than an autocratic country?
—Carter Lawrence Grieve, Lake Bluff, IL

I am a freelance artist, a daily internet-goer, and internet user to keep connected to friends and family. I need the internet to communicate to persons of interest. I'm already strapped for cash and it's already too difficult to make money. I do not want to pay MORE money to use a service I ALREADY have to pay for and use. I pay my bills through the internet. If I have to pay to use the internet and pay to go to the sites to pay my bills, I'm paying to pay to pay for my living space. That is unnecessary and illogical.
—Jeff Miller, Wixom, MI

—Sarah Brothers, Decatur, GA

The eradication of net neutrality only serves to allow cable companies to prey upon the ever-widening income gap so that they can get away with providing less service at a lower quality in order to make a higher profit for themselves and their fellow corporations
—Kayla Williams, San Jose, CA

If they do this Im pretty sure that everyone will cancel their payments and maybe someone would make a new company that is legitimately FAIR

The ISPs are not currently competing in a free market. Our internet speeds are not what they should be for what we pay for them. To reward the ISPs with all the protections of common carriers with none of the obligations just furthers this corrupt oligopoly. ISPs should be classified as common carriers.
—Evan Kester, Seattle, WA

Why would you do this, not everything is about money.

—Deasia, Katy, TX

The potential loss of net neutrality is shocking and there's no excuse for it. Consumers and citizens alike deserve a fair representation of any site they choose to visit on the Internet, despite which provider they choose. (And let's be real—at the rate large corporations are merging these days, soon there will be one company that controls all Internet subscriptions.) Does it seem fair to give corporations this much power? Clearly not. Please do not remove net neutrality. It is truly in everyone's best interest to restore this ruling.

I find it disgusting how net neutrality is in danger of being ruined. The internet is a free, open place where ideas and information can be displayed with ease. And nearly anyone with the talent can start up a new channel or website, and become successful if they are able to gain a following. Right now, the internet is the place where pioneers and entrepreneurs start out. Taking away our rights to equal access to all corners of the net is sickening, and lets be real. The only reason this is happening is because of certain greedy companies want more money stuffed in their already overflowing pockets. Please, hear me and the rest of us out- take the side of the people, and not the side of corporations that are only looking out for their own interest, and not what is best for everyone.

This may seem like a good idea. On paper a lot of things do, but paper is a flimsy thing that can be wrong. For the time being it may seem like there is money to be made by doing this. But in practice you, yes you, the one making this, you are going to lose money. You, the companies that buy into, the people who work for you and the people you work for. You will all lose money, very few people are willing to pay for this, and probably not now but within a few months you will see the decline. The economy, your economy will suffer for this.
—Connor Goeke, Cedar Park, TX

—Rhiannon Weaver, Helena, MT

As a college student already struggling to pay off loans for a higher education, forcing me to pay for decent internet is just outrageous. My parents and I are working like mad just to pay the rent and student loans, adding something like this is the rich getting even greedier. Put yourself in our shoes. My mother struggles to pay rent and buy enough food to feed herself and my high school aged brother. When he needs to do research for school, when my mom needs to pay bills online, when I'm trying to find new jobs, we'll need the internet as it is. Small businesses can't afford this kind of blow, both literally and figuratively. It's an unnecessary cost and it will destroy the American infrastructure we've worked so hard to establish. If you're willing to ruin the American name and throw us into even more cultural peril, continue as you were. But if you want to keep America happy and strong, we need to restore Net Neutrality.
—Chanelle Helle, Earlville, IA

I believe that internet sites should be equally accessible. To make some websites faster is discrimination. I strongly support net neutrality. Thanks
—Lydia Albrecht, West Bend, WI

Everyone deserves access to the internet. Noone deserves it any more than anyone else. We had a special, neutral and even connection with everyone else, it's like one massive community. You want to introduce discrimination into that? Because granting more access to one person than another is at its core: discrimination.

—Haleigh Osler, Tacoma, WA

—Rachel Southard, Buffalo, NY

Making the internet ruled by companies instead of by people ruins one of the greatest powers of the internet. People can do amazing things with the internet, just look at what John and Hank Green have done using YouTube. The potential is limitless. Until companies become more important than people. The internet allows people without a large audience to get the word out about things that matter to them. And it allows a sense of community. If websites won't pay Comcast, and I can't afford the "fast lane", my story can't get out there and I can't access my friends. I'm not sure I'm making sense, but it really is important.

no
—Shannon Arsenault, New Orleans, LA

This is ridiculous. The FCC is essentially created a way to further keep the middle class down. People do not all have the patience to deal with a slow internet connection. Large websites are able to easily pay these fees, which would technically be an illegal tax. Like telephone, water and electric, broadband internet has become a vital fabric in our society. We need it to access websites which cannot pay these extra fee, thus slowing them down and creating havoc on the middle class. Innovation will be dead. Innovation is what has fueled the American economy for hundreds of years. Ending net neutrality creates a total lockdown on this.
—Weston Adams, Boca Raton, FL

Please please please keep net neutrality! My internet won't even load anymore! As a student, I can't have that!
—Leah, Cookeville, TN

How about we keep access to information easy and simple? This is ridiculous and if all this petitioning doesn't work then internet is going to go dead and then what? What about all that precious profit?
—Rachel, Milford, OH

The internet should not be taken away from one or even slowed down just because we are a different class. We pay enough for the internet as is. The FCC needs to stop being greedy. I get it, I love money too, but when it comes to taking away new, uprising, revolutionary technology from a whole country, everyone is going to hate you. Obviously the FCC doesn't understand how the internet works.

—Ashton Fair, Frisco, TX

This is a terrible idea! Not everything is meant to be abused and taken advantage of.
—Bizzy, Puyallup, WA

The Internet should be equal to all to access, no matter what their standing is on money. Jerking up prices on individual websites is cruel and throws literally everyone who uses those websites out of whack. Just because they WANT to be able to squeeze money out of us poor middle and lower-class citizens in any way they can does not mean that they should. I know plenty, PLENTY of friends and acquaintances that depend on these sites for their online business, as they definitely don't need any more trouble in keeping those businesses alive. A certain, very close friend of mine comes from a very poor family, is about to get kicked out of the place she is in, with essentially no where else to go. She deeply depends on these online sits for her businesses to get her the money she needs to keep going, but placing prices on these sites will make it nigh impossible for get to make ANY sales, especially considering that her customers would have to pay, too. It's simple, people, the Internet is a free sure where people come to relax and have fun and interact with loved ones and live. Placing these prices will make it harder and harder for us to do even these simple actions. We know you have a heart - everyone is born with one - you need to learn how to use it.

As a college student, How am I expected to fulfill my duties as a student if tI can't access the websites I need to access. Say I am doing a research project and I stumble across a link and I can't go there because I can't afford it. I am already in debt for most of my life any way why make that burden even more. I fully hope that you understand and try to repeal this terrible mistake. This is just another way big businesses are trying to get more money and control the people.
—Brett Goode, Plymouth, MA

net neutrality for all!
—Cheyenne jones, Houston, TX

Stop. Why do you guys keep doing that? There is so many things you guys have the ability to shut down unjust and biased websites and yet, you guys decide to do this. I'm pretty sure you guys can do better/
—Marygrace cacawa, Orlando, FL

Paying for websites? Seriously? The Internet should be a free service to everyone to connect and share what they want. This act sickens me.

We Need this to be able to express the maximum amount of ideas possible.
—James Platte, Lansing, MI

I pay to have Internet. Now I have to pay for each website I visit? No just no..
—Antonio Diaz, Torrance, CA

This is an attack on the lower class by limiting the type of information available to them. The internet is a utility that helps people connect to getting jobs, staying updated, and connecting with others. Paying a premium would be unethical and a social offence.
—Hann Mend, Glendale, CA

DON'T BE FUCKING DICKS
—Devin Riley, McHenry, IL

As a college student (design major) who is already stretching my money as far as it can go, I can't afford for net neutrality to be gone. Many of the websites which I need for school and for my career probably won't be available to me unless I pay extra, which I can't afford. This in turn will wind up with me not being able to get jobs or to even do any jobs I don get properly, I won't be making any money, and will most likely end up on welfare.
—Taylor Romano, San Marino, CA

Come un guys... How did you think for 1 second it was a good idéal for anyone but you ?

Restore Net Neutrality!
—Kat, Enterprise, AL

Tell the FCC to start treating broadband like a communications service, and to restore its Net Neutrality rules.
—, Rush, CO

The internet is meant as a storehouse of knowledge and communication between all members of humanity. By shooting down net neutrality, the legislature is saying they believe that money is more important than the accessibility of knowledge and the interaction of different cultures. I shouldn't have to sign a petition for people to understand that that's wrong.
—Mp, Livonia, MI

YOU CANT OWN THE INTERNET
—West Ross, Raleigh, NC

Support startups and small businesses by keeping the net neutral. Hurting smaller companies and individuals undermines everyone

Stop being greedy and think about your citizens for a change.
—Alyssa Gourley, Vail, AZ

Restore net neutrality! The internet has always been a community where people can come together, rich and poor, regardless of any background an individual May have and it unites. By having this new legislation, you are taking away peoples right to a community and a massive resource. This is the United States of America and freedom is supposed to be our foundation. This is not freedom.
—Brittany, Parker, CO

Ain't nobody laying a finger on my internet okay YOU DON'T WANNA MESS WITH THE INTERNET THERE WILL BE RIOTS
—Courtney Shultz, Knoxville, TN

Net Neutrality for all!
—Brigitte Diaz, Winter Springs, FL

Don't you dare, FCC. America is far from classless, but the internet is a level ground.
—Liz Hannigan, Phoenixville, PA

If people are forced to pay for the internet, less people will be on the internet, less people will see the companies that try to make people pay for the internet. Soon, they will become a forgotten name, or even worse, become hated by the masses and get a bad reputation. Which would kill their business. I thought the internet was deemed a standard of living or something...
—Jamar, ,

Why on earth does a company get to control what content I can and cannot access, just so they can make more money?
—Ryan Johnson, Ocoee, FL

Why would we want he internet like TV? We shouldn't have to pay for the internet more than we already are. Websites that we would've had daily access to for information before would now cost money. What about college students? The majority of them are tight on money anyway. Stop this. Now.
—Zackery Green, Clovis, CA

Restore the New Neutrality rules.

Do not do this. The internet the way it is does a lot of good.
—Claire, Rockville, MD

Dont make people pay for the internets.
—Lauren, West Jordan, UT

Dear Representative, I believe Net Neutrality is worth fighting for, it is vital to the advancement of our civilization. Without it, creativity and innovation will be stifled in exchange for higher profits and short-sighted ambitions. I implore you to think of yourself in relation to the rest of the world. No one is an island, isolated from the consequences of their actions. Perhaps in the short term it will be beneficial to you and your family to do what the lobbyists/corporations want..However do not discount the emotional, mental and spiritual pain that will surely befall you and your loved ones, should you make the selfish choice to contribute to the obliteration of the last truly free forum left in the world. There are times in one’s life when they are asked to make sacrifices, when they are called upon by the universe to be a hero. Now is that time, we need you to be our Hero. All of us are in this together. Please stand with us, on the side of freedom and democracy. If you cannot do it for us, do it for your own peace of mind, so that when you look in to the eyes of your loved ones, you can smile to them, fully and honestly, content that you have done something truly noble. Do it so that you can look in the mirror, and be proud of the person you see there staring back at you. Please, help to restore net neutrality and equality for all. We need your help.

Too many parts of our country are ruled by who has the most money and who does not. Net Neutrality was one of the few things left that truly leveled the playing field for everyone, regardless of their background. Take that away, and it will cripple everyone. Or at least, those who were not ahead to begin with.

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

—Ann-Michelle Levangie, Jamaica Plain, MA

This is breaking the first amendment: our right to the freedom of speech. The internet is how much of the world communicates now. By taking away net neutrality, you will be reverting many, many Americans back to the 80s. There will be virtually no reason to even own a computer when you can't access the internet. It will negatively affect college students and all small businesses and small organizations. We have come so far with the internet - do not send us back. This is discrimination against the lower classes.
—Brin Williams, Cornish, ME

Dont take our freedom
—Jorge, Del Rio, TX

you don't understand the internet
—Kaitlin, Fleming Island, FL

The internet we see today is a wonderful creation of human ingenuity. It is a conceptually infinite span of resources through which almost anyone could learn about almost anything. What's happening with net neutrality is the equivalent of walking into a library, wanting to check out a book, and having the librarian say "no, you can't rent that book. you can't rent it, read it, or look at it." Our access to information is already limited. Television's already controlled by large corporations, all media is biased one way or another, and it would really be detrimental to society if people lost the ability to view whatever they wanted on the internet.
—Cameron McDowell, Greensboro, NC

I don't understand this fully, but from what I do, this is a big mistake.

—Laurie Maxwell, Senatobia, MS

We already pay for internet! Obliterating net neutrality is unnecessary and unfair to those already struggling financially.
—Orion Healan, Phoenix, AZ

If you really think about this, you're hurting more than people that enjoy the internet by allowing Version and other companies to do this. You're hurting students and working people. Think about it. Do you want us to pay loads of money just to have fast lanes and access to certain websites that are already free to view or do you want us to be able to advance as a society? The Internet is a free resource that can lead to innovation, inspiration, awareness, creativity and much more. Making us pay more to surf the web will hinder the great things that can happen in this world. The rich can't do everything. The lower classes have something to contribute too. The rich are not know it alls. They do not know all that is good for all of us. So think about it. Think about what you'll be doing to the world by allowing this to happen. You'll be dividing us up even more. You'll be depriving some of us from great opportunities. You'll be depriving some of us from a comfort zone where we can relax and be ourselves.

Hey guys seriously. Not cool.
—Rebecca Hirsch, Port Washington, NY

This decision is not only a blow to online businesses, both big and small, but it's a detrimental decision to our country's economy. The cable companies such as verizon, comcast, and time warner cable already make billions of dollars in profits a year from individual citizens. Allowing them to take money from businesses as well will stockpile an even larger percent of the nation's currency in these companies' pockets. More and more people will fall below the poverty level because there simply won't be enough money in circulation for our citizens to earn. This is, of course, not to mention the immorality of allowing these monopolized companies to charge citizens twice for the same service, once for access to the internet and again to keep their speeds up, as well as holding the internet hostage, something that is not theirs to take. Their power can only be granted by the U.S. Legal system, a system that was originally created in order to protect its citizens from injustices. Please protect us now from the tyranny of these big businesses. You are our last and only defense, and we need you more than ever.

No internet user wants this. Note one. Do you like people voting for you?
—Isaac Trucke, Oklahoma City, OK

As an artist, this will seriously hurt me. I take commissions online, and since I already have very little money, this will just make it worse. But not just for me; for every small business owner, school, and people in general. This is a terrible idea, and it has to STOP.
—Cassidy Smith, Coppell, TX

My dad didn't sign up his life into the Navy just for something as stupid as making net neutrality nonexistent. And I will not either, how will families be able to communicate with each other if their internet is slow? Huge budget cuts already have been made to make it more uncomfortable living within the military and they're making it even tougher? I don't think so.
—Frances Laureen A. Marcos, FPO, AP

The internet is a bastion of freedom of speech and expression. It is the newest and greatest source of communication. Without it, thousands of products and millions of people would never have interacted. Companies and institutions of all types do business online. With the power to monopolize and slow internet access, ISPs are able to devastate the internet and create an environment of preference. We cannot let this happen. Listen to the voices of your constituents, not your lobbyists. Do the right thing.
—Aaron Kiser, King George, VA

The internet is one of the last bastions of the free exchange of information. It is the single most powerful tool we the public have against government censorship, and biased news media feeding us misinformation. It is also the strongest learning tool for our future generations. No one group of people should EVER have control of it.
—Clayton Rains, Granbury, TX

You can change things like this, when they only affect your country. You are not the center of the world, do not act like it.
—Austin P, ,

REALLY? no.
—Rebecca Waldo, North East, PA

Preserving open internet is crucial.
—Erin Caldwell, Rancho Santa Margarita, CA

Giving big business, that already squeezes every penny it can out of the consumers, the ability to make us pay MORE for access to something that is free is Wrong. Will we be paying for better access to quality air next? These companies already make billions off of people who barely make thousands, why should we be MADE to pay more?
—Kristal Daniels, Bowie, MD

Seriously guys? Seriously?
—Thomas Staines, Gambier, OH

don't you dare do this to us.
—Regan Zlotnick, Walden, NY

Can they stop trying to control us? Pls? Thanks.
—Emariah Brooks, Tempe, AZ

Even though I'm not a citizen of the US, the death of net neutrality would still affect me. You must realize that your actions are taking EVERYBODY's internet away, not just Americans'.
—Linh Chi, ,

No this is awful why why is this a good idea? why the economy already sucks and you think this will help anything at alll you greedy assholes
—Emily Cole, Lake Orion, MI

Forcing those who work off the computer, pay for working. Forcing those who have no other form of communication, have to stop. Forcing those who are in danger & can't afford a phone have no way of getting help. Forcing people to have no way of social life outside of the depression of working 12hours a day & then having to go to a second job. We already have to pay for internet. It truly is wrong to make people pay for everything they do, pay for everything they have. Next, will we be taking away their freedom of speech.
—Aprielle, Temecula, CA

Why change it now? Rich people are just trying to get richer? I can't believe this is what it has come down to. This is a huge mistake.
—Ann, Kirksville, MO

This goes against freedom of speech and is just a completely idiotic and impractical thing to do. Please reconsider, consider how much this actually matters in terms of communication and most jobs.
—Ben, Peabody, MA

End net neutrality=asking for an uprising. NO ONE thinks this is a good idea, except for huge, money grubbing corporations, who frankly don't need th advantages ending net neutrality would give them.

You cannot allow access to information to become a luxury for only the wealthy.
—Kimberly Showalter, Niagara Falls, NY

In all respect, what needs to be taken in consideration is the fact that not everyone can afford to pay the internet as it is, if there are more prices or higher prices may I say, it will be a waste, because then nothing will ever get done. To have the internet free is a blessing (if you pay your bill) to slow down users if they don't pay a certain sum of money is wrong. Not EVERYONE can afford that so to selfishly and harshly assume that everyone can just take this new toll. And to add on, why would there be blocked sites? Tons of people use the internet for many things such as school work, entertainment purposes, research, help, and personal reasons that can't be shared, and to take that away is just brutal! We don't have much as it is, but the interner was something tons of people can enjoy without limits. Putting limitations on that is just taking the right and happiness away. Please do something about this, and really consider our side.
—Keara Whitehead, Baltimore, MD

While I may be Canadian this is a precedent that will affect the whole world. You do not have the right to FORCE the end of Net Neutrality on the entire planet because you value companies more than people.
—Caroline Zeeman, ,

You'll ruin the world if you carry on like this guys. Please stop. Leave the internet alone.

—Cason Ragland, Carrboro, NC

As an art student, the best way for me to get my work out there to get attention is to post it on the internet, to make a personal website with my portfolio. With net neutrality gone, I'll never be able to ensure that people see my work, and finding a career in the professional industry becomes even harder than it already is. For the sake of artists, and everyone else out there, we need net neutrality back.
—Rebecca E, Danielson, CT

Are you kidding me? Without net neutrality, small business owners are going to flounder. Free lance artists are going to have an even harder time finding work. Imagine if the water companies were allowed to just give their customers low quality water, and told them they have to pay a premium to have drinkable water. That is kinda like what internet companies want to do. Do not let them.
—Rain Williams, Portland, OR

I do NOT want this to happen, gathering information should be like a library. It's free, and all you need is a library card to access these books. We pay enough daily, for food, gas, t.v to watch, and pay plenty of bills. Don't make things harder for people who need the internet to search things up, and get to where they need to be.

Everything is done nowadays using the Internet. Want a job, have to apply online. Pay your bills? You have to do it online. What makes one bit of information any more important than the next? Who decides what you are able to access? Restricting our internet means restricting out freedom and our rights. The internet isn't as much a service as it is a location for work, socializing, education, organizing, play, and much, much more.

The internet is so important to me. The internet has helped me with school, helped me make friends, and let me have access to tings I wouldn't have other wise. Most of what I know is from the internet. I have created my dreams off of information I have found on the internet. I know it sounds silly, but there is so much good knowledge on the internet. I understand that money plays a huge part of politics, but people won't buy computers if there is extra money that has to be payed. I know I won't. The internet has helped me so much! I can't imagine my life without it! Please do all you can to help. It would make me and everyone else very happy. Thanks!
—Claire Schulhoff, Pittsburgh, PA

Internet providers make enough money as it is. Not only do they not need it, many could not afford to pay and continue to enjoy the greatest thing about the Internet: free access to almost all the information in the world. Not only is this act unjust (I don't remember anybody who would actually be affected by this act being asked if they thought it was ok.) and unecessary, it is also obviously a money making scheme. Nobody would benefit from this besides Internet service providers. This would have huge negative impacts on nearly anyone who does business online. Small businesses trying to stay afloat, freelance artists trying to scrape by on how much they already make, and even the average American who only occasionally goes online. I understand that Anerica is essentially a glorified oligarchy, but this is going too far. Have some decency. -Nathan Kercher

The fact that this even being considered is absurd and ridiculous. This is how some people get joy in their lives when they barely have anything else and how others connect with people from all over the world. Some us aren't millionaires, we aren't rich or wealthy. We have people we need to support, bills we need to pay, groceries we need to eat to stay alive, and gas to get so we can get to our jobs that pay enough to get us that money to support us. Our money is stapled enough as it is and now you want to do this? Some people have businesses and companies online that just barley keep the food on the table and roof over their head. This is the land of the free, not the land of you're only free if you're rich.
—Celina Perez, Beverly Shores, IN

You people need to stop attempting to convert everything in this world into a marketable resource. Corporations on the internet already have enough power without this, now not only can they thrive on the internet unimpeded but can also trounce any smaller sites.

—Kelly G, Syracuse, NY

I'm not from America, but trying to put a price on the internet like this seems like another way to squeeze money out of already hard working americans, I know a LOT of americans who run there buisnesses online and barely make a living, In fact i'm good friends with a few, i don't wanna wake up and find out that i can't talk to them anymore because of this decision.

There are families who scrape up every penny, every dime, every quarter they can, just to provide their children something expensive like a laptop so it may essentially help them in school. These families barely had enough money to pay for the laptop, so why should they be charged to use the internet and enjoy those little victories in the struggle of their financial situation?
—Cristian Alcantara, Montebello, CA

—Malin-Charlotte Odemark, ,

Please for the love of God stop giving other countries reasons to hate us and stop trying to control a service that every part of the world uses like we can decide on other people's opinions for them.
—Jordan Lee, Gastonia, NC

We live in a time where information is so readily available and the freedom to discuss, learn, express opinions and information are among the most valuable things we have. Instances like this, however, that add to an already overwhelmingly powerful set of very few distributors are truly damaging to the potential this world has.
—Devin Kosloff, Portland, OR

The Internet was never designed as a feudal state. It was intended and has been managed to date as an electronic free-for-all, where everyone's voice could be heard and be equally accessible - from newspapers to federal services to bloggers in their basement, and yes, even owners of cute kitty cats. To impose a caste system (namely, the tiered-speed model) is to throw our digital community backwards in time, by allowing the over-rich monopolies to stomp over everyone else if they don't cater the monopolies' whim. Lack of net neutrality will continue to crush the modern incarnation of the American dream by telling small companies and startups that no, they cannot gain an audience, they cannot gain a foothold, they cannot prosper and be heard until they grease the palms of those in power (the service providers). The internet is a telecommunications SERVICE, and a modern necessity to conduct business, to earn employment, to gain an education, and to connect with others - just as the telephone was at the turn of the last century. The internet must be classified as a neutral service and protected as dearly as we have our other freedoms. Save the internet, save the world.
—Carissa Wolf, Moorhead, MN

The internet is not a commodity that can be bought, and therefore is not a commodity that can be limited. The internet is an evolving platform for communication and information. It has other purposes, but its main purpose is to transmit information, regardless of origin or importance, from one place to another, from one person to another. You don't control when someone makes a call to their mother or sends a text to their significant other, or how much 'bandwidth' they can use doing those things. The internet is just the same. Internet Service Providers should be held to a standard, and that standard should be service. If I pay for a service, the company who provides that service should not be able to control how I use it. I am paying for a service, the service for the unlimited stream of information that the Internet is and provides, and since I pay for it, like a good little consumer, I should be able to do with it what I please.
—Casey Berry, Owensboro, KY

Net neutrality absolutely needs to stay. If free speech to truly stay free then there is no way that ISPs can be essentially allowed to dictate which websites are worthy of being allowed to share their information with the world. That is censorship and I always thought we had freedom of speech. Please, I implore you to all Net Neutrality to stand and prevent us from being a country where the only things that are seen on the internet are what big corporations only want us to see.
—Bria Jones, Milwaukee, WI

i want the internet to stay free for both users and website owners!
—Jacquoline Acosta, San Antonio, TX

Net neutrality is something that helps everyone. It helps teenagers find an escape, it helps people get off or whatever, it helps people learn language and friends.
—Jay Bronstein, Candler, NC

Why would someone even think of this?
—Abigial Lee, Annapolis, MD

Television is one thing, because it still has very controlled delivery of very specific information; the internet, a vast well of information that could be used for SO much good, is quite another matter. If all ISPs end up offering only certain websites, the information accessible to people is going to be very biased and very inadequate. Please don't let our one truly informational media source be taken away from us.
—Caroline Wall, Greensboro, NC

This would literally cause so much trouble it isn't even worth it. How much everyone relies on the internet. Just don't even bother, the country will try and overthrow the government if this was passed.
—Lydia Brown, ,

The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed.

—Haylee chelkonas, Crystal River, FL

The internet should be a neutral zone, we already pay for how much we can access. Corporations are not meant to run the country, the government is, but then why are corporations controlling the country? Why give even more privilege to those who have it the most? Such as people who can afford to shell out the money opposed to people who can barely afford the internet but need it because it's now a necessity (to apply for jobs, education) to make it unaffordable will cause problems to the economy.

The internet is necessary for so many aspects of modern life. Taking away equal access to the internet is a huge infringement on our first amendment rights. It's basically sending the US down the road to fascism, and I am one of many who will not stand idly by as the US descends into fascism.
—Erika Larsen, Missoula, MT

The internet has become a foundation for a multitude of businesses that rely on neutral access to all websites. If you allow ISP's to turn the internet into some kind of package plan like television, it is going to destroy an independent landscape that is like a fertile crescent for small business. Denying the public a free and open internet is a step towards destroying the closest thing society has ever seen to a pure competitive market. You would be strangling small businesses who have used the web to ship goods, crushing a massive leap towards a united and free world, suffocating the voices of a new generation of artists and innovators expressing themselves around the world, and by extension, shoveling unprecedented power onto the plates of profit obsessed corporations. Please, I beg you, and the world begs you, do not destroy this. Do not allow this to be taken away. The internet represents freedom. Don't crush it. I don't want to have to say, "I remember when the internet was free."
—Keith Stillman, Marietta, GA

As the world is filled with more and more wonderful inventions to help fill the gap between friends, to allow more and more communication such bonds are created. It's a darn pity that this sort of thing can be taken advantage of and be charged and isolate them. The internet is a place of refuge for many- A safe place that is always there. Or should be. Net neutrality is essential to people's success in school, their social life, and for some it is their only source of income. This will ruin lives. This will cause America's students to be in even more debt than before. This will destroy the amazing culture that the internet has created. This is wrong. —Robert, Alhambra, CA

Hello, my name is Jonathan Mendez and I am a U.S. soldier. Seeing that laws I protect have hurt those around me, demoralizing them and rather making life difficult in he freedom peace loving land, I would like to put my two cents in. Internet neutrality is quite a big issue and really needs to become the norm. While adding these limits may benefit some it kill the majority of the people on the internet. The minority should not over compass the majority, it should be equal and free for all of us to use. Making fast lanes and having site pay to have these fast lanes kills the freedom we once had and has only driven up roar in the community. My word is to appeal the laws restricting the internet and allow it to run free for those who depend on it as a source of income or art, even scholastic assignments in schools and universities.

Killing Net Neutrality is going to encourage companies like Verizon to keep charging customers more and more, or trick customers into thinking websites slowing down is the websites' fault. Which causes the powerful websites to bribe Verizon and others into slowing down the competition, and will soon create internet monopolies. It's inherently wrong, and like many things wrong with America, it is only supporting the 1% at the top. I hear the FCC has put previous cable company chairmen in charge. That is utterly disgusting to allow such an evil bias controlling the internet.

The internet is ours.
—MacKenna Anderson, Jackson, MI

This can make americans waste money. Is this a way to get people off the internet? Because this is a really ineffective way to deal with it. Anxiety and depression will increase. No way to make a living for many people. No fun. No laughter. Everything happy about a teenager's internet life gone, just because some companies want to make more money??
—Mara Wilks, Riner, VA

NET NEUTRALITY
—Justin Garner, Scottsboro, AL

The internet providers are already gouging us for every cent they think they can get. They have banded together to make a monopoly at the peoples' expense. Don't let them ruin the most important tool of the 21st century.
—Elizabeth Duncanson, Chattanooga, TN

This will help nobody except big corporations, and encourage hacking
—Laura, ,

Net Neutrality is an absolute necessity.
—Hannah Miguel, Livermore, CA

All this is is a way to line the pocket book with money. The internet is something special, and right now it's being held at gunpoint for all it has.
—Shannon, Indianapolis, IN

I'm a kid who not only uses the Internet for entertainment but for research on special projects at school. Please don't take away the Internet, you'll being doing kids AND adults a big favor.
—Jasanee Killins, Cordova, TN

I'm extremely disappointed in the FCC's decision. I'm pursuing a career as an artist/designer and am in the process of setting up a portfolio website. It is absolutely necessary to have a space on the web and I am concerned that this decision will render my website useless. How am I supposed to compete with those who have the money for faster internet?
—Erica Costello, Blackstone, MA

I need to use the net for research on jobs and furthering my knowledge to make sure I'm up to date on working technology. Forcing us to pay for certain sites will just put more financial pressure on people who are already tight on money, even more so right now with the economy still trying to get better. Not supporting net neutrality will cause many problems for people who run businesses from the net, or people looking to apply to jobs on the net, since many companies now require online applications. Please Keep the Net Neutral.
—Erin S, Eudora, KS

My internet is important to me, and my free will is even more important.
—Chandler Davis, ,

why do they always care about money? Can't they just let us have our freedom? I use youtube most of the time so I DON'T WANT TO LOSE IT AND HAVE TO PAY.
—Audrey Pham, Gaithersburg, MD

The Internet MUST remain neutral and unbiased, no matter what!
—Nathan Wilburn, Athens, TN

This is a horrible thing. It unfair and can and will ruin lives. We need to stop this right now!
—Lindsay Doherty, Bethany, CT

In this day and age, the internet is not a luxury for people to use in their spare time. It is a necessity for day-to-day life in the modern world.
—Rosalind Forsythe, Silver Spring, MD

This is absolutely disgusting. This is nothing but a money grab! I'm poor!
—Hailey Lovgren, Moorhead, MN

Who in their right mind thought this was a good idea? It's TERRIBLE —Cesar Montiel, Brownsville, TX

Dear FCC, This ruling is going to have a huge, negative impact on small businesses, independent freelancers, and anyone else who depends on the internet to make a living. It is unacceptable to leave these people in the dust while giving a fast lane to large companies. Your job is actually to prevent this from happening. Please consider the ramifications of this ruling and make the laws that need to be made in order to protect the freedom of the internet.
—Erin Costello, Blackstone, MA

dont do that —Brandon Benbow, League City, TX

This is unacceptable
—Aidan Yrizarry, New York, NY

Can't believe I have to petition for this.
—Emma, Las Vegas, NV

Please
—Antonio Mizael, ,

do not
—Kacie, Elizabethtown, KY

I cannot believe this is a thing. Our internet service providers in this country already charge an arm and leg for service that isn't even as fast as other connections across the world and now have the audacity to try to package certain sites in a deal for more money. This is nothing more than a way to hinder information and communication all while making a buck.
—Angeliq Cuffee, Chesapeake, VA

Do this and hell will rain upon.
—Lydia Rego, Ferrum, VA

I would like to express my concern (and indeed, wholehearted opposition) regarding the recent Net Neutrality ruling. This ruling reeks of classism and shortsighted greed. There are many whose livelihoods depend on access to the internet without being able to pay extra for such a presence. Barring access for all but the wealthiest is not only detrimental to the individuals and small businesses of the country, but skews every facet of information that the people receive, limiting our intellectual quality until we are no longer free but simply sheep with no awareness outside of our so carefully constructed pen. I urge you to stop contributing to the possible decline of our economic diversity, intellectual stability, and position as a pusher of boundaries in this world. This is bigger than money and loading times. This is about the ruination of a greatness we all built together.
—Kathryn Davis, Pittsburgh, PA

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY
—LeAn Vo, Centreville, VA

I will not tolerate anything less than pure freedom, and this is infringing upon it big time. I'm not visiting the internet to view the webpages I want to look at anymore, now I'm visiting the internet to view the pages VERIZON or COMCAST want me to visit. Ya know,the ones where they can advertise to me cheaper and more efficiently. And they hide the "subversive" stuff away where nobody can view it, and thereby benefit from it. This to me, is an assault upon the collective human mind. It's a deliberate restriction of certain types of information, and not necessarily for the betterment of the species as a whole, either. The people who want to control how you think and what you perceive on a daily basis are not your friends. You are their CUSTOMERS, and they don't give a shit about you. All they care about is how many of their friends' products they can sell. Pretty soon, you won't be able to view a website on certain ISPs that don't have a major corporate sponsor. Webpages won't be displayed simply because they haven't yet been bought. This is the future of the internet if you do not act now. The television companies have already begun to enact their masterstroke. They have done this by merging television with the internet, and also by merging television/internet with life woven into it's very fabric. Home security systems now are fully connected to and monitored by certain television broadcasting organizations. At the very least, I will say that is dangerous how much power we give these people, and they're slick enough to take it all from you before you even realize it's gone. Let's all take it back.
—Cyrus McGuillicutty III, Newark, DE

Stop dicking around in the government and work on things that actually matter instead of making life and communication more difficult for the rest of us.
—Dakotah DeCou, Renton, WA

Stop.
—Cailtin Feehan, ,

The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I’d rather not be limited even more by someone else’s greed. Net Neutrality is essential.
—Amber, Parsippany, NJ

This is horseshit
—Mark Salstrand, Rockford, IL

Please start treating broadband like a communications service and restore Net Neutrality rules. Thank you.
—Charly Flenniken, Corryton, TN

This effects EVERYBODY who uses the internet, including businesses who may rely on using the internet to stay afloat. Not only does this damage regular users, but this is also a huge blow to the economy.

This does not look to benefit the everyman. Fight to restore net neutrality!
—Cris Grobnic, Columbia, IL

This isn't democracy. This isn't security. This isn't right. Please think about how terrible this would be. I understand that you guys want complete control of everyone and everything, but that's not what human nature is. We need freedom just like we need exercise and food and water. And you already charge us for food and water. Please, please, please don't do the same thing for freedom.
—Samantha Brown, Windsor Mill, MD

Please put Net Neutrality back.
—Anna Smith, Staten Island, NY

Naw man don't fuck with my internet
—Nicole, Murfreesboro, TN

Don't let major companies monopolize the internet. It's making things more complicated for the future.
—Gabriel Brown, Falls Church, VA

Your short-sighted decisions don't just affect your country, they affect every consumer. Try thinking before you act.
—Tom Cadogan, ,

The internet should be free and available to everyone. With the economy as bad as it is, many people would not be able to afford much internet access if they have to pay to visit certain websites. This hurts not only internet users, but it also affects the flow of traffic to other websites. This is not right, and net neutrality should be restored.
—Alexys Lewis, Waldorf, MD

The continuing subjugation of people based on income is an unconstitutional crime of slavery created by those who already have the common person in a monetary stranglehold. When businesses are allowed to discriminate against it's own employees and it's customers by charging inflated prices that continue to rise because no one can afford to buy it in the first place so they must charge more to compensate for the loss of profit we will all eventually suffer the cost of their greed.
—Paul Anderson, Reno, NV

the internet shouldn't be treated like this you greedy fucks
—Raina Sizzle, Winthrop Harbor, IL

the free and open internet is one of man greatest accomplishments, and it's freedom is what has made much of its content great and available. don't take the one voice many people have in this world, away.
—Casey Alanna Carter, ,

Net neutrality is something that is good for all Americans regardless of economic class.
—Collin Coleman, Midlothian, TX

This is disruptive to how people use internet. Schools, businesses and other places of this nature would have to be provided the funds for this which they don't have. also this isn't going to help the economy, it's just going to create more problems and convince people to avoid the internet.
—Erica Imoisi, Dorchester Center, MA

Free internet to some of us is the only form of entertainment some of us can afford. Please don't let corporate mongers take this from us.
—Johnny Withrow, Richmond, VA

Please this is a part of our culture and socializing and individuality, and you will only run into serious problems if you try to limit it. You'll only make more problems for yourself, and increase the sense of desperation and organized crime just like the prohibition. Everyone uses and needs the internet, and it should not be used as another excuse to suck money out of people, especially considering where that money is going to go. Instead of flowing through the economy to buy products, it will probably just sit at the bottom of some corporate leader's pocket. We are already being sucked dry with college and fewer jobs.
—Emily Chavez, Westlake Village, CA

NEUTRAL NET
—Jack jones, ,

The internet is meant to be a free space for everyone, regardless of ethnicity, age, gender, or wealth, to express themselves and access a plethora of knowledge. This is such a large part of our culture, it's ridiculous to charge for it.

THIS IS NOT FAIR.
—Kay Delada, Peoria, IL

Let knowledge be free.
—Sean Darch, Pompano Beach, FL

dont take away internet! we need this for school! we pay enough already!
—Emma, Atlanta, GA

Destroying Net Neutrality is the one way to make internet service providers the richest corporations in the country. Piggybacking off the working class, simply because they want to visit websites and not have to spend 10 minutes attempting to switch between pages on the same site. By doing this, you're effectively blocking lower income people from being able to access sites they want to, whether it be for pleasure, education or business.... because some CEO's are greedy. You're forcing them into internet slavery... not being able to do what they want, only being told where they can go, and where they can't and when they try to go somewhere they're not 'supposed to' they'll be punished. Restore Net Neutrality!
—Michele Heil, Garner, NC

Net neutrality is important to protect our freedom of speech and safety
—Sarah Whetzell, Los Angeles, CA

This is an outrage and if you dare take away our freedom on the web we will fight back
—Chase Jones, Wilmington, NC

I'm appalled that you would allow a company to infringe upon our right to unbiased media. I'm appalled that you would let companies pick which websites we can use, and which ones we can't. I'm appalled that you would even think to do this.
—, Houston, TX

Making people pay for internet is downright outrageous. How do you expect people who make a living off of their websites to survive? Do you expect students in college to pay not only for their tutition, books, and education, but also for the little help they can get for those things(the internet)? I thought maybe in the future we would be making things easier to access for citizens, not harder.
—Ellen Adamson, Benton City, WA

the internet has fucking improved the world so much in such a short amount of time doing this would fucking ruin that —zephyr Barnes, Boise, ID

Did you not learn from SOPA?
—Rosemary Connelly, Brunswick, MD

I don't want the internet to be dominated by corporations with the deepest pockets making the rules. Getting rid of Net Neutrality will destroy the ability for new start-ups to become big ones without the backing of a huge corporation.
—Philip Sellick, Parrish, FL

Net neutrality must be restored! The Internet is a free, great invention which people use to connect to those all across the world with just the click of a button- and taking this away, in some aspects, is crossing the line of our human rights.
—Faria Rehman, Villanova, PA

Just don't. Corporate greed has already ruined so much. Why must you take this last remaining joy out of peoples lives? For shame.
—Riad Shaaban, ,

This is such bullshit.
—Courtney M Congdon, Centerville, UT

—Moxxy Rogers, North Las Vegas, NV

Don't mess with the internet...seriously. Y'all (the gov't) have messed up enough. Please for the love of God, leave the internet alone. That is one of the only joys we have left. Please, do us a solid and protect us for a change. Don't let the ISPs dictate what I can and can't access via the internet. I'm already paying them a large monthly fee for access. It doesn't need to be any more granular than that. Thank you and have a wonderful day. -Very Irate Tax Payer.

—Cheyenne Mead, El Cajon, CA

wtf is wrong with you
—Valentina Ceballos, ,

This is a step in the wrong direction for the internet. Giving internet providers the ability to shake down website owners for money to load quickly is tantamount to making said internet providers into mob bosses, or loan sharks able to break your kneecaps at any second. It's a gross misuse of power, and needs to be stopped.
—Dylan Ingram, San Antonio, TX

JUST DON'T DO IT.
—Serena, Saratoga, CA

The lack of Net Neutrality hurts not only the common user, but also freelance artists. This hurts the economy: most people can't afford much at all, and forcing people to pay for websites is just wrong.

—Cierra M, Orlando, FL

I'm a 20 year old mother to a toddler, working full time and going to school full time. My money is stretched as far as it can go. I use the internet for my classes, for accessing things from my workplace, for applying to new and better jobs, for keeping up with my family and for talking to other young moms like me. The internet is one place that should not only be available to the rich.

There are some children who rely on the internet for school projects and homework, many of which are on the Internet through websites such as Edmodo. They rely on Net Neutrality, especially if coming from a low-income household, to complete online schoolwork and achieve the best they can academically. This is discriminating against underprivileged individuals or families who can't afford to pay more for Internet and restricting the freedom of the most open, creative platform yet.
—Casey Ottenwaelder, Huntingtown, MD

The internet will never be the ssme if this is a permanent change. The internet is supposed to be a free space and It has been taken from us.
—Andres Arcaya Marty, , stop capitalizing the internet.

—Rue, Irving, TX

The idea that limiting content that we can see based on the money a company like Viacom pays is a gross misuse of the single greatest media outlet the word has ever come to see and use on a regular basis. Imagine the New York Times is the only newspaper ever printed. Imagine they were paid by GE to only report on GE friendly things and only allow GE advertisements for the first 10 pages. This would leave the truth, the common people, and the world out of the loop. The majority of the world wouldn't get past page 5 let alone page 10. The majority of the world wouldn't wait 5 minutes to watch a single cat video embedded on some blog when they could watch a cat video on the sponsored website that paid Comcast several thousands of dollars to get better bandwidth. Imagine calling your mother or your brother or your wife or anyone else you can't talk to face to face at that moment in time and having a horrible connection because they don't pay Verizon a stipend like Apple does so it's customer services can work better. You can't call the local family pizza shop well but you can call Dominoes easily because they pay a few million for this. Allowing net neutrality to die is allowing the censorship of the less well-off and the stunting of the single largest connective device the world has literally ever seen solely based on the idea of capitalism taking over yet another facet of human society that we consider integral to our world. This might not impact a middle aged man like yourself but as someone who's going to live with the consequences for a lot longer than you will; bring Net Neutrality back.

—Aubrey Vaughn, Peculiar, MO

Net Neutrality is ESSENTIAL. Social media alone has changed the way we communicate and spread information--take the Arab Spring, and the recent activism in Ferguson, MO. It is a valuable resource that should be available to all. If we no neutrality, imagine the fallout in education alone--so much material is online these days, and students from underprivileged families have a hard enough time already. We need Net Neutrality. We need it now.
—Kit Arbuckle, Williamsburg, VA

The internet is a necessity in today's world. By allowing these rules you're letting the providers basically tell us what we can or cannot do because profit. Breaking the first amendment. It also concerns me as a disabled individual that this would make things harder.

—Jutta Sugden, Park City, UT

We live in a society that is dependent upon the World Wide Web and the availability of high speed Internet as well as accessibility. Striking down Net Neutrality is taking 1,000 steps back in our American society. The wealthy should not be the ones to dominate our society by any means. Eliminating Net Neutrality means that the population will be viewing misrepresenting data about current events in the world. Students need proper Internet access for their education. Entrepreneurs need proper Internet access for their businesses. All people need proper Internet access in order to communicate with one another. I am both shocked and appalled by this decision and demand that Net Neutrality, as it was before, be restored. If you deny listening to the public's demands, then you are refusing listening to the majority who use the Internet.

Broadband needs to be treated as a communications service! Refer back to 2003's WSIS Declaration of Principles, or the 2011 UN Special Rapporteur report. Denying Net Neutrality will continue to prevent communications, jobs, services, and everything else people rely on.
—Wednesday, San Antonio, TX

FCC, do what you've been nagging about these past decades, and keep our telecommunications safe!
—Dave! Ess, Lake Zurich, IL

This is just stupid, why the hell should people have to pay more to live their lives the way they want or need. Not to mention, doing this will really screw some schools up because they use technology/internet every day for research and what not. I'm pretty sure the school board will go crazy having to work with and around things like this.
—Danielle, Bethel, CT

Political communism only works if everyone is equel. Same goes for the internet - the internet only works if everysite is equel. Net neutrality is the best thing that has happened to anyone, it is good for everyone, it creates jobs and grows new businesses, it's a huge factor in today's commerce and retail. By taking away something that gives opportunities, you are taking away freedom for the younger generations - piece and chunk at a time. Restore Net Neutrality. Keep America Free. Don't let large corporations take away our FREEDOM, for something as petty as a few dollar BILLS. KEEP AMERICA A GROWING AND FREE NATION. FREEDOM OF SPEACH AND RIGHTS OF COMMUNICATION NEEDS TO BE IN THE HANDS OF THE PEOPLE, NOT THE HANDS OF LEGISLATURES AND CORPORATIONS. THIS IS NOT A BEUROCRACY. THIS IS A DEMOCRACY. RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY.
—Chloe Harper, Colfax, CA

How would you like it if someone just said 'no, you can't go where you want to when you want to without paying a fee'… Don't like it? Niether will anyone else.
—Brittney Fuller, Lakeland, FL

Please don't take away the internet. It's the only way for me to calm down after a long day. Having to pay for relaxing and having fun is already a problem and needed for practically everything, why take that away from everyone when you're already getting paid for tons of other things? I beg of you, please don't do this. Bring back net neutrality.
—Lilly, Minneapolis, MN

To those of us who sometimes have to overdraft our accounts to pay bills, it is very horrible to have to deal with slow internet that crashes constantly while paying absurdly high rates for 'fast and reliable' internet. Please hear us out.
—Lanna Bickerman, Eureka, IL

Don't take away my internet or I will stab someone (-:

Shame on us for killing net neutrality. If we want to achieve our potential as a human race, we need to stop controlling access to information.
—Jennifer Gendler, Redondo Beach, CA

Major corporations are not the only ones who have the right to express themselves and have access to their consumers. Net neutrality allows everyone's voices to be heard and everyone's content to be seen on the internet.
—Hannah, Chapel Hill, NC

By restricting our internet they restrict our connection to one another and restrict our resources from which we gain information and more indepth knowledge than in schools. They're trying to steal from us and keep us dumbed down. WTF.

WHAT THE HYECK MAN YOU CAN'T DO THIS. THE INTERNET IS MY HOME. I LIVE HERE DON'T DO THIS TO ME.
—Sai McKnight, Shelby, NC

Restore Net Neutrality! This is nothing if not an act of tyranny and monopoly that the government has promised us not to allow. The government rules over those who consent to be governed, this is stated in the constitution which this country is SUPPOSED to abide by. I will not consent to be being governed by a country which allows tyranny and monopoly. Restore Net Neutrality, or you'll cause uncontrollable chaos with your own nation. There's a reason things like Ferguson happen, justice is removed and protests start. Remove justice in any place and riots and protests will commence. We have a right to protest, and this being a right, I deny the right of monopoly which you, as a government, should deny as well. Give in to the demands of the people, or the people will not give in to the demands and taxes you impose on us.

I believe that the removal of net neutrality is a direct violation of the right of press. FurtherFurthermore it is a discriminatory action that will limit the access people in poverty will have to the resources they need. Not just that either. Many many freelance workers and small business owners could be entirely shut down damaging our economy while providing money only to large corporations. This is unfair and a violation of our rights.
—Dakota Walker, Sacramento, CA

We're already paying to have internet, why should we be forced to fork over even more money just because we like using a certain website? It makes no sense!
—Brianna Wright, Phoenix, AZ

The government already rips us off enough. Stop taking our fucking money for once. Thanks.
—Haleigh Nesbitt, Cumming, GA

What happened to the land of the free? Net Neutrality limits our free will and puts a strain on our voice.
—Lois, Vineland, NJ

i am absolutely appalled at the selfishness of the FCC and those supporting it. The internet was shaped by its users and content creators, not large broadcasting companies etc. Do not allow them to take more money from us so that we can have something that has been our right for years.

This is entirely unacceptable. The endless and exhausting fight for Net Neutrality just proves how essential it is, and the FCC and the federal government's failure to understand and respect every person's right to privacy and free will on the Internet is irrational, irresponsible, and a waste of time had by all.
—Sarah Zeitner, Tacoma, WA

—Anna B, Scottown, OH

As an animator and an artist this inhibits my ability to show my work and receive feedback through my peers online.
—Gabrielle Louchart, Troy, MI

This could severely impact education. If internet companies can block or slow down the sites and applications of their choice, this is bad news for online college registration, sites that professors have students access for homework and study help, and online classes. College and high school students don't have the money to pay for upgraded packages, and if they go to cafés to do their homework, it isn't likely that cafés will want to pay extra.
—Siobhan Leadbetter, Chico, CA

The internet allows for people to go from nothing to everything almost everyday. It allows me, a college student with little money, to find intelligent discussions. Large sites such as social networks are what colleges use to communicate, be it student to student, faculty to student, university to student, or any other combination. We use blogging sites to make a professional impact on larger societies than we have access to. Shopping sites allow us to avoid the price gouging that college towns so often attempt. But mainly, I need to communicate, be it with my family, another student, my university, or the world. Please restore Net Neutrality.
—, Odenville, AL

This is unfair. Corporations should not be able to micromanage the world's largest source of information for their own monetary gain.
—Seth McCall, North Charleston, SC

I'm v disappointed. I'm pro net neutrality.
—Yui, Ellicott City, MD

The current direction the FCC is going with it's policies regarding the internet will completely and irreversibly change the internet into a monopolized environment and it shows that the FCC is almost entirely influenced by big business and almost direct bribes rather than the people they are actually meant to serve.

Don't take away our first amendment rights!!!
—Katherine, Bronx, NY

The internet is a free enterprise platform the likes of which we have never seen before. The possibilities that the internet opens to every day people, from business opportunities to communication with new people to the free and easy acquisition of information, are incredibly important, and are more than our ancestors could have ever dreamed of us having. In order to preserve this unprecedented freedom, we need to ensure that the internet remains an equal platform for all websites and users. The internet is the true free market -- anyone can start a website or a forum if they have the knowledge, the time, and the ideas. To hinder the freedoms of the internet would be to hinder the economic freedoms of all of its users. Please reconsider your earlier decision to end net neutrality, for the sake of the economy, for the sake of knowledge, and for the sake of our future.

LEAVE THE INTERNET ALONE, PLEASE! WHATEVER IT IS IT'S FINE!
—Conor Phelan, ,

As a high school (and soon to be college student), net neutrality is of huge importance to me. The internet has become such a huge source of information, adding "fast" and "slow" lanes make it harder for students to get work done. Not every family will be able to afford fastlanes. Now and days, so many teachers rely on the internet for assignments; and there are students who won't be able to perform the needed tasks at hand since their family lacks funds. Then you have to consider the schools themselves, schools need access to grading websites, YouTube, and other resources. Classes can be as short as 45 minutes in some places; there's no money to spend on fastlanes and no time to wait on slow lanes (ask a few schools around the country). Aside from the money aspect of this issue, the only people I see against Net Neutrality are the ones far from the majority. Within the first hour of knowing about this, I've seen thousands of angry people voicing their opinions on why Net Neutrality should stay. Along side the people, websites are for Net Neutrality. The only party I see against Net Neutrality are companies, which are already rich enough. I'm just 16 and my opinion will probably be disregarded. But if someone is listening to what I have to say: First of all, thank you. Second of all, this is something many many people care about; my generation is all about the "now." Please, don't let the next generation be about the "then."

By taking away the internet from the people you create an environment in which they no longer have a place to voice their concerns and help others, and in doing so you create a scenario in which people very well may take to the streets instead of forums to protest actions they disagree with. Don't be daft.

—Alyssa Shoenfelt, Trenton, NJ

please don't do that, it's fucking stupid. thank you
—Bruna, ,

Getting rid of net neutrality is possibly the dumbest things to even consider. It will ruin business' for people. It can completely ruin the way people live their lives. And these companies do not need more money. They're already drawing in many new customers with promises of good deals but once they are customers the good deals disappear. We need net neutrality.
—Liz, Endicott, NY

How dare you. I don't care of anyone actually reads this or not, but how dare you try and give the control to all the rich people. What a shame, I love America but this country has really become a shame to live in. I wonder what else we can ruin before 2015!

Hi. This is Devon from Indiana. I'm one of your constituents. I strongly support net neutrality and I'm asking you to urge the FCC to reclassify internet providers under Title II, and sign on to the Internet Freedom Letter being circulated by Sen. Angus King. Reclassification is the only way to actually establish the neutral and non-discriminatory internet that the FCC itself claims to be committed to. Thank you!

USA net neutrality affects more than just USA customers. It effects everyone who would do business with the USA.
—Andrew Corke, ,

the FCC can't seriously expect to be able to take a freedom this large away from millions of people and get away with it. This isn't a small matter. Broadband is probably the most used communications service of this day and age, and giving corporations the right to slow down websites that don't pay them limits our freedom of speech and ability to grow as people.

—Amy Cutchin, Frederick, MD

Please restore net neutrality.
—Millie, Franklin Park, IL

Please, please, please overturn this.The internet is SO important. It IS a communications network. I met the love of my life on a small, internet gaming website that you've probably never heard of but that helped me make friends (which is difficult for me to do in face to face because of my social phobia) and helped get me out of depression. It's helped other people reach their dreams through artistic media. It's helped entrepreneurs get a leg upon huge corporations. But most of all, it connects people. People all across the world,of different backgrounds and ethnicities. The internet is a place for people to share ideas, knowledge,creativity! It's a place for individuals to express just that: their individuality whether that be through webcomic, or blog, or videos, or yes even Twitter. Please preserve net neutrality. As a Canadian, I am very worried about how this could affect my daily life. I attend an online Canadian university. Most of the Internet services that I use are either American or are hosted by American servers. If the internet would be limited in the states, would I all of a sudden have a lack of information because other universities and institutions can't afford to have an internet presence? The internet is about freedom of information. Having the ability to connect with your peers and work on a common pursuit of knowledge is such a crucial part of our societies. I would hate to see the world where all of a sudden this ability to collaborate is gone simply because cable companies in the States want more control and more money.

This could be the end of the internet, you don't understand how important the internet is.
—Nicole Lacey, ,

Stahp that —Gwendolyn Orzech, San Antonio, TX

As a librarian, I believe that access to the internet should be equal. Broadband should be treated as a communications service.
—Sandra Riggs, Athens, GA

WHY ARE YOU TRYING TO MAKE IT LIKE A TV INTERNET AND TV ARE TWO DIFFERENT THINGS —Gabriel, Chicopee, MA

DONT DO IT
—Bryanna Cueiel, Beaumont, CA

No
—Bob ross, Sacramento, CA

The internet is suppose to be a free, open space for anybody- regardless of sex, age, class, education etc.- to post whatever they want. The internet is not meant to be sanctioned and divided into groups based on who has more money.
—Eleanor Wynne, Elizabethtown, PA

Businesses need internet. Schools need internet. A majority of people need to be able to access websites frequently, for jobs, for school. America has the lowest minimum wage as it is, and we pay the most for health care and college. We are paid the least but we have to spend the most to survive! Charging more for internet access is a terrible idea, and if you even thought it would be smart, I sincerely hope you get voted out of your position of power because you don't know how to use it properly.
—Stephanie, Aiken, SC

PLEASE DONT RUIN THE INTERNET ITS MY LIFE FORCE
—Luke Korff, Clifton Park, NY

Hopefully the amount of people signing this will change your minds. People don't have major money to spend on websites, it's not fair. Please think about this.
—Cheyenne, Indianapolis, IN

The internet should not be limited according to one's ability to pay.
—Suzanne Dawson, ,

Losing Net Neutrality will disable anyone who uses the internet for the freedom it provides and would be a mistake on the level of the bank bailout in terms of the damage it will do to the people of this country.
—David Furnari, Caldwell, NJ

You are just trying to silence your people. We will not be silenced. I will not be silenced.
—Molly Montgomery, Redding, CA

What happened to the rights of the citizens?!??!??!?! This is America the land of the free, not the land of the free for businesses and shit.
—Delaney Swann, Chattanooga, TN

No ones gonna pay to use the internet your just trying to get money for no reason fuck outa here
—Myles B Creacy, North Haven, CT

why would you even change the internet though what is the point
—Georgia Brooks, Erlanger, KY

Appalled. This is the only way some people find jobs.
—Shannon Simon, Dallas, TX

I'm not going to come at you, I can see the benefits of this. I really can. But when making decisions that really affect people's live like this, you can't think about how much money you could make or how many people you could help; you have to think about the people that are going to be hurt. For every 1 person that gets the 'fast lane' and pays the big bucks, there are 1000 struggling artists who have used the internet as a means to make money doing what they love. What's going to happen when it's the end of the month and they have to pick between financing their site or paying for groceries? What about the small business owners that use Pandora in their stores? What about the kids whose music outlet comes from Youtube and Spotify? And then you have the people who use the internet to make purchases and order pizza and check their accounts. What happens to them when their 'slow lane' internet doesn't load up in time and whoops, looks like there's no pizza for little Tommy's birthday parth- it took 20 minutes for the Hungry Howie's webpage to load and now I found out that the place is closed. Whoops, looks like we're behind on our credit payment this month- it took 10 minutes for the page to load and then another 5 for the add to load and play before I could access our accounts, only to find that it's too late to pay it. Now sure those are all extremely unlikely situations that probably wont' happen to many, but the fact is that they COULD happen. And the fact that there's the potential should be enough to derail this operation. Do you really want to be the cause of little Tommy's tears when he can't get pizza for his 6th birthday? Or the reason the Miller family is behind on the payments and has a lowered credit score? How about the responsibility for the artist that has to go without adequate food for days because their trying to make money through their website, but they have to first finance the site by getting the 'fast lane' internet. Please, think about the little people here. Not everyone can afford lighting, heating, cooling, food, water, phone bills, clothes, AND internet bills. The middle class- the working class- is dwindling as it is and this action is only going to make the middle class less populous. Please, reconsider. Bring back net neutrality.
—Maya Ludtke, Howell, MI

The internet isn't yours to command. Please refrain from participating in this kind of audacious, and ridiculous act.
—Chris Stockman, Phoenix, AZ

If this were ever to happen, due to my economic situation I wouldn't be able to afford going on the internet. Please don't do this. Please.
—Lyneshka, Bayamon, PR

please don't do this, seriously
—Michael Tarnowski, Sheboygan, WI

don't do this.
—Kashmir Daggett, Sac City, IA

We should all have the ability to do whatever we want on the internet with nobody controlling what we do. This isn't going to get very far because of the many people using the internet throughout the world that enjoy doing things the way they want to. We already pay for internet so I really don't understand why we need to pay even more than we already do. This shows how much the government only cares about money and not about the people.
—Emilee, Portage, IN knock that off mate

—Lyv Austin, Fort Dodge, IA

The internet, for all it's nastiness and frightening content, is still the last bastion of American freedom
—Mark Rempel, San Diego, CA

The internet is a world wide tool used for connecting to family, customers, friends, and employers. By removing this ability, people will struggle with their businesses and their connections considering not everyone in America can afford the requirements this issue demands.
—A Corona, Orange Park, FL

I want my Net Neutrality back!
—Christina Matthews, Inman, SC

This is ridiculous. I am ASHAMED of my "free" country.
—Nicole Odzer, Miami, FL

stop messing with our wifi
—Adam Marsh, New Holland, PA

Net Neutrality needs to be restored. The idea of removing net neutrality is beyond ignorant. Seriously by removing it everyone and their dog will want to put everything behind a tiered paywall to access pretty much everything. As if the $300 a month I pay my cable/internet/phone provider isn't enough.
—Richard Benedict, Wichita, KS

I'm not okay with this. The internet isn't supposed to have lanes. The internet isn't supposed to serve the needs of giant corporations that'll make a profit on top of their profit. The internet is for us, for citizens, for people.
—Sunnysuraj R Patel, Houston, TX

This decision in this era can be seen as an infraction on our freedom of speech as well as freedom of the press. Net neutrality ensures that voters can be well-informed and therefore preserve democracy as we know it. Taking this away is another step in America becoming a full oligarchy.
—Taylor Johnston, Port Wentworth, GA

No one has the right to steal another person's right to information on the internet.
—Daniel salinas, Edinburg, TX

You cannot take more free information and press than you already have.
—Katelyn Creith, Slidell, LA

You greedy, power hungry bastards are trying to ruin the whole world. You are literally the devil. Fucking fix this you goddamn asshats
—Emilija, ,

This is unacceptable and disgusting. Absolutely disgusting. We must restore Net Neutrality.
—Natalia Rodas-Calderon, Arlington, VA

en garde, fuckboy
—Steven Miller, Des Plaines, IL

This is an outrage. There is no way that I'm going to pay for my right to be able to visit certain websites.
—Emily Worstell, Belpre, OH

THIS HAS TO STOP. COMPANIES CANNOT RUN THE INTERNET. IT IS FOR THE PEOPLE.
—Sarah Findley, Cullowhee, NC

You can't do this. We can hardly live anymore

—Ashleigh, Lakewood, CO

The internet is a source that should be free to any and ALL users!
—Kris, Susanville, CA

I honestly worry about my schoolmates for having to pay even more Internet bills just so they can stay in college at this rate. You know, go to college, get a good job in the future? A better life than shitty urban conditions? Well, FCC denies that for them.

How about instead of trying to hurt people the world over, Verizon actually sits down with all its bigwigs and starts ACTUALLY CARING ABOUT PEOPLE?
—Sarah Cuevas, Citrus Heights, CA

WOW These people are just hungry for power huh? Give us back our freedom for the internet or else theres gonna be ISSUES big time, you aren't gods, you can't control everything in the world, So stop trying.
—Skyler Rohrpasser, Brookfield, WI

Seriously? You're trying to take away from various artists' livelihoods? I'm sorry, but that's not how things should be done. What's next? Andrew Ryan?
—Kaitlin Boggs-Jones, Portsmouth, RI

Please don't. This is terrible. The beauty of the internet is it's neutrality. Allowing ISPs to create a pay to play service will limit access to only those who can afford to pay. And what they pay for will often be less than what we have now. Just like cable monopolies on television services.
—Melinda King, Hendersonville, TN

YouTube was meant for free enjoyment. Not for us to pay and laugh for. U can't put a price on EVRYTHING.
—Tom W, Tucson, AZ

Bruh
—Olivier sweet, Brookline, MA

IF I HAVE TO PAY MORE TO DO THINGS, I AM ALREADY DOING FOR FREE, I WILL BE PISSED OFF,AND THATS A FUCKING UDERSTATEMENT. FCC SHOULDNT DO THIS TO US WTF. SAY NO TO "FAST AND SLOW LANES"
—Margarita, Nicollet, MN

America is failing under it's capitalist foundations, the freedom is being stripped as our country becomes more panicked, and the largest machination of collected human intelligence is going to be further commercialized and controlled as those without capital continue to strive to survive. Tyrants live in excess and peasants live in poverty. With the power of the leaders increasing, we are falling back into a fully medieval land of action instead of communication and interpersonal connection.
—Zachary Hebel, Rives Junction, MI

The system works. The rich get richer.
—Alysa McCray, Iowa City, IA

Restore Net Neutrality immediately! All the removal of Net Neurality does is further punish small business owners, and freelance artists/content creators such as myself. This can also be used to censor people and their opinions. The removal Net Neutrality is a threat to our first amendment right of Freedom of Speech, as well as a massive blow to the ability of thousands of people to make a living.
—Jason, Ilion, NY

Please put a stop to this and restore Net Neutrality rules. Please reassert your agency's clear authority over our nation's communications infrastructure and reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service.
—Brittany, Sumter, SC

no please
—Kira, Elgin, IL

restore it. freedom of information on a level playing field.
—Mark Aaron, Los Angeles, CA

Make websites free again plz
—Jayleen, Hemet, CA

It is not the U.S's decision on how other places use the internet as well. It should stay the same.
—Chelsea, Wichita, KS

This such a horrible decision. Student research will become such a pain if net neutrality goes down and I still have more the 6 years of education to go.
—Rebecca, Houston, TX

How are you even considering this???? You people are idiots damn
—Abbey, Aurora, IL

Small businesses like mine and many others I know would be unable to compete without net neutrality. The destruction of my livelihood is something that I will not accept. Please help the people who rely on net neutrality fight against corporate control. The internet should be a place of freedom.
—Paulina Chinea, Columbia, MO

This is unconstitutional. This in turn limits out ability of free speech and infringes on our rights as Americans.
—Angel Madero, San Jose, CA

Just no. Come on.
—Kiah waretini, ,

It doesn't take a genius to see the failure to protect the people in this. A medium of free expression, something guaranteed to us in our first amendment, is being taken away on grounds that the FCC has no right to control this regulation. If they don't, then make a law to follow up on it! It's a viable, useful plan to say that in order for the internet to be equal, that it must be kept neutral. Taking this neutrality away for some politicians and companies to line their pockets hurts more than just the consumers. What happens when it takes two hours of trying to forward a simple text report because your business can't afford to pay the fees to get in the "fast lane"? What happens when everything long-distance and connecting that we've come to know and love about the internet is torn free form us because of greed to control and do everything we want? The big companies have the money to try and force the hands with under-the-table tricks, but we have the number to make noise. This is NOT right. The internet IS the internet because it's neutral, and this was one of its founding principles! What's been done would be akin to ripping up the US Declaration of Independence and Bill of Rights, saying our forefathers had no right to decide on the laws. Every moment you wait is another moment of injustice and money-biased lack of liberty that you let go through. Restore the open internet!
—Arlandis McClain Jr, Louisville, KY

This is complete bullshit.
—Kaitlyn Lamb, Eldridge, IA

Screw this —Killian, Woodstock, GA

You realize how you're going to kill so many people on the inside. The internet was where people put what they wanted to share however they wanted to share it. Take this away and what used to be on the internet will leak into reality. You're asking for fucking trouble.

—Tessa, ,

We pay enough.
—Riina, Hurlock, MD

Allowing companies to charge varying rates based on what website they wish to use is one of the most obvious cash grabs ever attempted. Please help to prevent this flagrant abuse and support true net neutrality.
—Garrett Sessions, Raleigh, NC

Its ludicrous to think that the government, on any level, would allow the internet to be limited based on what people can pay. The internet is where the world is now, take that away, and what do we have? Its your job to protect and educate your people, and to protect our rights. Do your job.

—Tucker Gibbons, Palo Alto, CA

Please bring back Net Neutrality! It's sorta incredibly important!
—Katherine Hanks, Altamonte Springs, FL

Fuck, FCC, how is this not blatantly seen as a stupid idea? The majority of people do business/shop online (some, like myself, with the small amount of money that I do have to find cheaper NECESSITIES that I can't always afford in-stores), and by charging people for priority internet, it would be a terrible decision. Now, I love the internet, I run a blog, keep in touch with my long distance boyfriend and family from across the country while I'm at college (because, GUESS WHAT, my mother is too poor to afford a phone and track phone minutes cost 4x as much for long distance calls, so the internet is literally the only way I can speak to my FAMILY), but regardless of all that, I could still survive. SURVIVE. Not live, and be happy, and have the comforts I need and the people that are close to me, but I could scrape by, emotionally speaking. I also happen to be a college student, as I mentioned. I am a first generation out of an abusive household where the abuser refuses to support me and my 'refugee' mother cannot afford to help me, and so I am paying out of state tuition ALL ON MY OWN. Now, that's a lot. Add in cross-country travel several times a year, books, and supplies, and that's hefty. THESE ARE NECESSITIES. You know what else is a necessity? INTERNET. I literally need it to do my work. You can't possibly expect someone who doesn't have a car to stay at the school library until 2 am every night to make sure she has everything she needs and then WALK home after the buses are shut down in the middle of the night during winter because she had to do her homework on the internet which SHE CAN'T AFFORD? No. But aside from a private stand point, and returning to what I said prior about online businesses and shopping, business owners and online stores (like Amazon and eBay) will lose profit because most of it's customers, who go there for low prices because THEY CAN'T AFFORD TO PAY RETAIL PRICE, WON'T BE ABLE TO ACCESS THEIR WEBSITE BECAUSE, SURPRISE-SURPRISE, IF THEY CAN'T AFFORD A REGULARLY-PRICED BLENDER, THEY CAN'T AFFORD "FAST LANE" INTERNET. This is bullshit and America already has enough of an economic crisis on its hands and enough depressed Americans (far more citizens per capita in America are depressed than most other developed countries. Mostly because shit like THIS keeps happening). So, knock it the fuck off.
—Rachel Karam, Bangor, ME

what is wrong with y'all
—Saadia Khan, Orlando, FL

Please, don't take this away. The internet is not for the U.S's business, it's something we all need to enjoy. It brings people from all over the world to communicate and make new bonds. Don't do this.
—Camille Bonner, Solon, OH

Treating the internet like we do with television is not going to help anyone.
—Alexis, Bass Lake, CA

please bring back net neutrality you dorks
—Graham, Natick, MA

One of the best things about the internet is that it has come to be a place where people of all kinds can communicate with one another from across the world. People are reconnecting with old friends, actually keeping up with classmates from high school and college, and provided with an infrastructure to work with one another easily. As a college instructor, I've taken most of my classes into virtual space. We use Google Drive to turn in class assignments, and I upload PDFs for their assigned readings. They email me when they have a quick question. Today, we used telescopictext.org to talk about better ways to add more vivid descriptions in narrative. All of these practices would become much more difficult if net neutrality is blocked. Processes that take only seconds now would take far too much time for a class to use these current internet services. Additionally, it would make it impossible for some of my low income students to participate in out of class activities and assignments. You can't turn your paper in online if you can't afford even the slowest internet. There is so much at stake here. I'm only giving an example from one small part of my life. We should be broadening people's access to the internet, not limiting it. I truly believe that access to the internet has become an issue of social justice. From job applications to basic communications tools, so much happens online, and if people cannot access these spaces, they will never be able to make it in our world today. Please take action that will defend the availability of broadband networks for all people.
—Megan, Louisville, KY

This is obvious corporate pandering and it must stop.
—Duncan Smith, Crestline, CA

The internet is a wonderful place where anyone can connect to another from a couple miles away to halfway across the world quite easily. It is a unique medium where people of similar interests can find each other and connect, where artists can freely share their art to the world, and so much more. We can do all this because the internet is free and neutral, it is for anyone and everyone no matter how much income they earn a year. Internet neutrality helps nurture and expand the human capacity and it's too complex to treat it as television cable; frankly it's a waste of potential. Please restore net neutrality.
—Mesel Tzegai, Louisville, CO stop, fuckers.

—Matt, Philadelphia, PA

Please start treating broadband like a communications service and bring back net neutrality!
—Tina, Marietta, GA

Please don't make me even MORE ashamed of being an American. Please just let the internet be. The internet should be neutral to everyone and companies shouldn't be able to take the internet away.
—Kenzie, Big Lake, MN

I'm really scared right now.
—Livia Lund, Minneapolis, MN

The internet is incredibly important for many peoples' business. ISP's get more than enough money, and paying more to access sites that are crucial to business is unethical and hurts many peoples' business —Adrien lays, ,

Restore net neutrality please
—Carlo Ruggeri, Menomonee Falls, WI

The "Free Internet" is what drives innovation and allows for limitless possibilities in business and technology. Without Net Neutrality internet is going to turn into another service like cable where everything is regulated and stifles competition and the ability for everyone to access it. In America we claim to be free and have freedom of speech, that's what the free internet is all about.
—Bryan Ansley, Shawnee, KS

—Virginia Falangi, Los Angeles, CA

This is a terrible idea.
—Madison Ott, Roy, UT

The original purpose of the internet was free, fast, equal exchange of information. Don't take this from us.
—Makaela O'Connor, Georgetown, IN

Net neutrality is very important to so many people. It keeps us all on relatively level footing when we are online. I want to continue to live in a world where internet access is a freeing force rather than a restrictive one. Why should the elite get priority access to the wealth of knowledge, discussion, and entertainment audiences avaliable online?
—Emily Jankowski, Englishtown, NJ

The internet isn't something that should be censored in any way, shape, or form. Let TV be TV and the internet be the internet. Don't ruin this wonderful thing.
—, Tucson, AZ

The fact that net neutrality is dead is absolutely preposterous. When is the government going to start acting like it serves the people?
—Christine DiBello, West Chester, PA

Currently, the internet is the only good place to start a business, and more widespread business ==> better for the economy? So this is just some pretty pathetic short-term thinking. Good for the guys at the top - until the country starts to suffer from all the money being in one place.

Don't mess this up, guys. N.N. is the only solution.
—Ethan Smith, Allen, TX

I do not believe our Congressional Representatives are quite as naive and ignorant as their recent decisions are bringing them to be. They must be intelligent right? Do they really think that with all the selfish, greedy, and oligarchic decisions they have been making in the past couple decades that they/we/everyone won't feel the repercussions at some point down the line? With a rapidly expanding enlightenment and discontent being spread through a majority of the population that the congress claims to be representing, do they think that they can continue to keep up the ploy that they have been playing without any consequences? I'm afraid to find out. And this does not pertain solely to net neutrality, it pertains to many unfavorable aspects that they seem to going along with like everyday business. I have heard things from different social communities and I fear for the state or order in this nation if things do not get 'right' again...

Dearest FCC, thank you for keeping the true interests of the citizens your agency was designed to serve and protect in mind in this decision. Choosing to stand up to the unconscionable desires of greedy and power- hungry corporations is truly what the American citizenry... Wait, you WHAT?! Of all the low-down, bag-over-the-head, punch-in-the-face, rotten, miserable and outright greedy things to do! You have helped to utterly CRIPPLE our economy. If the FCC was an elected position, you can all bet your fat, rich, white asses you'd be on the street come next Election Day.
—Steven Chesworth, San Antonio, TX

We already pay for the Internet itself. Now you want us to pay for the sites themselves?! That's the most rediculous thing I've ever heard. That's being nothing but utterly greedy.

You suck the fun out of everything else on this planet, why can't you just let us have our internet?!?!
—Alaina Price, Minneapolis, MN

Taking away net neutrality will not be a progressive move for America. Rather than form some ideal sense of fulfillment or patriotism, the removal of net neutrality would just create public dissent and anger among the people who rely on the internet and its various methods of connecting people around the world for not only business, but also entertainment. And by removing net neutrality are we not becoming the same as our fellow nations around the world that insist on internet censorship by taking away certain websites? Except, we'll be making it worse by requiring the simple civilians of America to pay for a luxury they are currently able to afford because of the very fact that there are no restrictions.

—Anna M., Adkins, TX

The Internet is a place where people can be who they are. With websites like Youtube, Tumblr, Twitter, or even just a simple search engine like Google people can be who they are without any cause. The price just to access internet is already high enough, but if you have to pay for the access to websites they will rack up and eventually no one will want to use it. This is the same thing as paying for each individual piece of exercise equipment when you are at the gym, no one will want it and they will eventually just not use it. What about schools that use internet? Schools are in debt already, everyone is, but would having schools cut budgets just to access some 10 odd websites? What about the websites that just start up? They can't spread, become popular, or even get noticed. Each website starts with nothing and it spreads through other websites, having to pay for websites will just basically create a monopoly for websites such as video sharing, social media, etc. That's why Net Neutrality needs to exist, people need a way for them to express, learn, and a whole new world where you can access things easily and not get bothered by unavailability.

By ending Net neutrality: you're ending one of the most open forums for freedom of speech. Isn't that what we are about in this country? Freedom of speech? Don't take away a platform and sell it off to capitalism. You think people will pay to use certain websites? Some will, of course. But people like me? Do you know how useful some of these sites can be for inspiration for artists, sharing ideas, connecting with people whom you would never have met otherwise, and a network of connection, hope, and education for those who are looking for advice on certain subjects? As an LGBT person, some of the most useful answers come from those undergoing the same issues, not a school counselor who finds you unnatural or a Wikipedia page which is generalized for the topic, not answering your questions specifically. Making us pay with money that we may not have to simply connect with others is unnecessary restraint.

It's the only connection I have with people that live so far and if I have to pay to use those websites to keep contact with my own family? I have to PAY? To talk to my FAMILY? That is completely ridiculous. If that happens. It's quite literally taking away my rights to communicate with my own family.

This is supposed to be a land of equal opportunity. Where a guy with a dream and a small bank account can start up a website that becomes a phenomenon. Google. Youtube. Netflix. All of these started up in much the same way. An idea in the head of somebody who was willing to take a risk. But now the big corporations can water down our internet experience. They can pay off and bribe the ISPs to get faster service for their website. We can be made to pay to see content that is beyond the narrow scope. They already control our television and our newspapers. The internet is supposed to be the last frontier of free and unbiased information. For that to be true, it needs to be open and accessible by everyone. Not just some prick who already owns most of this country.

We NEED net neutrality! The idea of limiting how much of the internet people can see unless they pay more is quite frankly sickening, and just goes to show how villainously money-hungry the corporations in charge really are. How are kids who can't get to a library supposed to do research for school projects if their parents can't afford to have access to the sites they need? How are online entrepreneurs supposed to be able to support themselves if they have to pay extra to ensure that people can actually visit their business website? How are average everyday people supposed to enjoy themselves on the internet if they have to pay out the wazoo for proper access to it all? But no. The telecom corporations don't care about the everyman. They only care about their profit margins and how much blood they can squeeze out of their hapless customers. This needs to stop, NOW! Bring back net neutrality! This isn't just about internet, and it isn't just about money! It's about FREEDOM!
—Jessica Kimmey, Taos, NM

A world without Net Neutrality is a world that I don't want to live in. So many people depend on the Internet for their livelihood. I am not currently in a place where I would consider taking my own life, but with how the world is now, this may be the straw that breaks the camel's back for a lot of people who already have it so hard in this world. —Brigette, Bangor, ME

The Internet is many peoples' lives and jobs. I don't mean kids and teenagers wasting their lives away; many artists and YouTubers make their ENTIRE LIVING off of the internet. Without Net Neutrality, they'll likely lose their jobs. Plus, the Internet helps people. Many humans (male, female, other, young, old, and anything in between) have met their best friend and/or significant other ONLINE.
—Becky, Wakefield, MA

I know this signature doesn't matter, but it would be nice if the government actually thought about the people who lived in it's country for once, instead of the corporations who apparently own it now. Pipe dreams.

If you guys kill net neutrality, you'll be killing off dozens of businesses, friendships, and lifelines! The Internet is so important to society these days - Trying to consumer-ize it will only end badly!
—Sharisse Nadine Tilbury, ,

I use the internet almost every day for things like school work and business related planning/scheduling. I'm already struggling to pay the bills as it is, and I know many people are in the same situation I am in. This would make it impossible for me to finish my education, continue my career, and it would make a bad situation even worse. Please understand that I am not the only one in this situation, and how much the internet has helped us all and by making it harder for us to access it, it is only hindering us from doing more int he world.

—Jahnavi, Brush Prairie, WA

I am so dissapointed in our system for allowing this to happen. The allowance of thos to happen reeks of money and corruption. I've yet to talk to a single person about this issue who is not for Net Neutrality. Destroying this is a travesty that will not be reversed. I urge you to re-establish Net Neutrality to avoid the continued trampeling of our rights as creative individuals by the lone siren song of profit. Please

This is a joke. The government is so bought and paid for by this point that we are beyond legitimate repair. This is a perfect example of how our government bends to the needs of the corporation while completely ignoring the actual citizens rights and voices. I hope America is strong enough to boycott these companies and fight because the government is slowly but not so suddely declaring war on those who still value their freedom and are aware it's being taken away.

Right now there is no one protecting Internet users from ISPs that block or discriminate against websites, applications or services. Companies like Verizon will now be able to block or slow down any website, application or service they like. And they'll be able to create tiered pricing structures with fast lanes for those who can afford the tolls and slow lanes for everyone else. It's time for the new FCC leadership to correct the agency's past mistakes and to reassert the agency's clear authority over our nation's communications infrastructure. To preserve the open Internet, the FCC must reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service. We need Net Neutrality.
—Johanna Kapaan, Rochester, NY

I and most of my fellow Americans depend upon a balanced, open forum for learning, sharing, and discussion. By giving preference to well-established companies or individuals who can pay whatever elevated fee is assigned to the "fast-lanes" of the internet, the FCC will create an environment which discourages the spread of knowledge and the entrepreneurial spirit on which our nation was so optimistically founded. Net Neutrality is vital for our country's continued success in this increasingly digital world.

—Kaytus Daalyn, Lufkin, TX

The internet is a big network that connects people all over the world. Key words: connects, people and network. Having ISP's that discriminates or block websites, applications or services, dictating to the world is not good thing. We the people of the world need to be able to connect with each other, however they wish. Why limit that? Why give a corporation that kind of hold on the free people of the world? One they don't own? Or do they own us/internet? The people of this free world aren't slaves to be subjected to what they are allowed to see. Sincerely A future Software Engineer P.s. Freedom shouldn't be selective. It shouldn't be dictated by any ISP. Pleasant day to you.
—Jodi-Kaye Darby, ,

This does not need to happen, use some common sense, net neutrality is what makes the internet work. We can't do this!!!!
—Eric Northrop, Old Lyme, CT

Please, a lot of people cant afford this. Many people rely on the internet to keep in touch with loved ones, do research for school etc. Most people cant afford this. The internet is the only we have.
—Marina Samuel, Bronx, NY

I'm completely shocked and rather disappointed. The fact that people can't see what a negative impact this would have on the economy, organizations, and the spread of information is discouraging. I hope that people will soon see how truly important net neutrality is to us all.
—Kenley Borgerson, Portland, OR

this is ridiculous.
—Emma Slotvig, Saint Paul, MN

Going through with this will have a HUGE impact on society and our culture itself. We don't want to think of it like that, but it's the truth. DO NOT let Net Neutrality die. A select few people with money already get to choose what I see in the news or watch on TV. The internet should not be pay-to-win, and all ISPs should be labeled common carriers, just like cable and telephone services. All IPs are made equal, just as all phone numbers are.
—Kaitlin Kime, Dallas, TX

Please, I do not use very many sites, but I know people who do. People shouldn't have to pay for websites when they already have to pay for internet access in the first place. This is just so internet companies can make additional, unnecessary money.
—Kiran Baum, Elk River, MN

Plz
—Kaitlin Cowley-Deyoe, Rancho Palos Verdes, CA

net neutrality is the one thing that outside companies should not control. all data is the same, its data. just because companies want to control data to make a higher profit, dosent mean that its right. the data is owned by the world, not specific companies. we say that america is the home of the free and the lack of net neutrality is actually a step back from becoming free. this is an oppression of the internet community, of the people who rely on the internet for research, of the people who use the internet to receive news. this will impact the country in the most negative way that anyone has seen in a very long time. the purpose of the government is to make laws that help the people, and this lack of net neutrality is actually for the businesses and not the people. i call on the people who are reading this and i ask you what type of goverment do you want to be? the kind that takes the freedom away from the people or the kind that gives the people a voice.

—Randi Grounds, New Boston, TX

This means that the American internet is going to be firmly under the control of those who have the most money. You'll only get to see the content of those who can pay the ISPs to provide access at a reasonable speed. This means that you can expect to see skewed representation of just about everything, with those bigger businesses who can afford to pay ISPs a premium for access deciding what you can and cannot read, view and consume on the internet.
—Camille Perrault, Harwinton, CT

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential. It needs to remain.

—Cassandra Lee Martinez, Stafford, VA

reventing FCC from terminating net neutrality helps keep the internet connected! It is a way of expressing our freedom, sharing our statuses and opinions, as well as gathering information for personal/educational purposes, which is very, very important in today's society (especially with the technology savvy youth that grow up using internet and technology)! By limiting this, you are limiting people's freedoms while imposing more hassle just to gain more money. View the perspective on our side and stop imposing ridiculous requests by trying to gather more income via the destruction of net neutrality. This is disgusting and I will not stand for it.

Dear Federal Communications Commission: The D.C. Circuit's decision in the Verizon case dealt a huge blow to the open Internet. Right now there is no one protecting Internet users from ISPs that block or discriminate against websites, applications or services. Companies like Verizon will now be able to block or slow down any website, application or service they like. And they'll be able to create tiered pricing structures with fast lanes for those who can afford the tolls and slow lanes for everyone else. It's time for the new FCC leadership to correct the agency's past mistakes and to reassert the agency's clear authority over our nation's communications infrastructure. To preserve the open Internet, the FCC must reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service. Use your authority to establish a solid legal footing for the vital policies and protections this court decision threatens. This will open dangerous doors with no repercussions, limitations, restrictions, or checks and balances should a company, individual, or service decide to You'd be killing a quite great part of a culture, a high-speed source of info and knowledge, and a constant flow of art. Even though thats exactly what seems like it's meant to be, and get quite more cash in the process, and then you'd be risking more riots and violence, but then again, seems like the way you've already decided. It's the great beauty of the internet, even if the majority of the users only care about it as a way of killing time, there's just so much to it as a world-wide-one-click-network of free speech, opinion and search, so as bad as it may seem to be, it will al least no te tolerated outside the US for this kind of laws to be passed, and i don't mean politicians, i mean people who use it everyday as a source of income and action in general.

Soon my city will be making fiber optic internet access a thing. Screw Comcast; if this is how the companies are going to act, I'm switching.
—Diana Wohler, Longmont, CO

If broadband companies are given the ability to charge their customers for faster or slower internet, Comcast will be solidified as a monopoly. Comcast already dominates the field, but with this new ruling, Comcast will be able to slow down connectivity to their competitors like Netflix, forcing individual citizens and its rival companies to PAY for faster service. There are no doubts that Comcast would abuse this new power to rake in ridiculous amounts of profit by blackmailing other companies to pay for fair connectivity speeds.

How will people continue to thrive? They won't. Online business owners will fail unless they have heaps of money and as a senior in high school with plenty of knowledge in the area of website creation and management, I am afraid for the well-being and even downright pummeling of any success that we've reaped from the internet and it's freedoms. —Richard Compo, Everett, WA

This is ridiculous. A law such as this would only serve the wealthy and prevent others from doing simple things such as enjoying the internet. What about students in schools who need the internet to help with their homework? What if they can't afford to pay the extra money? Then what? We are supposed to be building a better future for today's youth, not a more expensive future.
—Sarah Sturm, Maywood, NJ

Please restore net neutrality, the Internet is this species most AMAZIG creation and it is that way because of net neutrality. If you take that away you're taking so much away from so many people, and not everyone can afford to regain what you're taking away. Don't destroy the most important creation since the invention of the wheel. Don't take the quality out of something so great because you feel you could make some money off of it.
—Alex Foster, ,

Honestly this is getting pretty tiring. Every time a new provider tries to slip a new act or something by to benefit them and their pockets. While everyone else suffers. Right now the trades are in huge demand. And do you know where most people are getting their start and information for those are now? On the internet, learning from others independantly. Every time this happens the internet rises up to counteract it. And I can assure you, should this not be resolved? Someone will make something new to replace it. And create something that the net should always be.

—Lauren Thurgood, Fort Collins, CO

The internet is like a library for modern Americans, and very important for students. Taking away access to the internet unless you can pay more is like stealing encyclopedias. Yes, people with less money deserve the same internet money as those living large.
—Sarah, Cincinnati, OH

As a lower income worker I am abhorred by the FCC's money grab into a sacred place. Yes I said sacred because the internet does something nothing else can, it creates an even playing field, if I don't want to be on fucking Pinterest, if there is a smaller blogging site available, I have that option. I refuse to pay more for the basic right to information.

—Lily Cervantes, Cedarhurst, NY

It's sad that someone who already gets money just by people using a service that isn't exclusively theirs are trying to not only create a monopoly, but are about to effectively kill any reason for people to use the internet. This is basically SOPA all over again, but aimed at accessability rather than people's personal creativity. I can't afford a more expensive package, and I live in -norway-, I do my business with people abroad who may completely lose any internet they have if this goes through. or at least the brunt of their ability to communicate with me will go down. Why is it that the US and its companies try to world-police/world-monopolize things when they can't even get rid of systematic oppression in their own countries and only look to serve themselves? It's 2014, get with the program, you're supposed to be the country of freedom, get out of the stone age (culturally)!
—Iris L. T., ,

—Eric Benton, Austin, TX

Citizens of the united states and elsewhere deserve an equal access to the internet, because it is a vital tool in running businesses, work, school, and communicating with each other! As such, it should be protected from rulings that seek to restrict access to it and discriminate against those who can't afford to pay more. It's inhumane to limit human interaction, and will deal a huge blow to the economy.

—Brittany Reid, ,

We already pay for internet access! We shouldn't pay more for content we now get free. Don't do this! The internet is a sacred space where we can go to be ourselves or live in a fantasy away from the troubles of the world, even if just for a few minutes a day. The internet helps businesses grow and thrive because they can freely upload content. Artists, businesses, sales, heck, even walmart. Many people shop online, but if they have to pay more just to do it -- or if companies control what can be viewed-- most people will discard the internet aside and try to find the next best thing. Please don't let others control our freedom. This is America. America is the land of the free. Let freedom ring. Let internet stay neutral, let it remain a domain of fun, quirky, weird, creepy, disgusting, smart, helpful, social, and interactive. But most of all, let it be neutral. Let it be free.

—Taylor haggard, San Tan Valley, AZ

Please don't do this, minimum wage makes it hard to pay for cable alone, WiFi and net neutrality is all I have going for me.
—Benson Smith, Centreville, AL

As a young professional working at a smaller company that depends regularly on consistant internet access, I can honestly say that this change may destroy the way we handle business. We must seriously take into consideration the potential devastating consequence this judgement could lead to, for individuals and companies alike. This appears to only benefit the large cable companies whom are already being paid large sums for internet service. Offering the "fast lanes" for an additional payment is extorsion, capitalising on a freedom we currently rely on and need in this day and age. I am not sure who will read this, but whoever you are please know that this decision will impact the United States more than I believe we invison possible. Thank you for your time.
—Rachel Brown, Columbia, SC

This would be really shitty and not just for folks that use the internet recreationally.
—Rudy Smith, Deatsville, AL

This is completely, %100 ruining one of mankind's greatest creations. So much good comes from the internet and being connected with other human beings across the world. Why do you (the FCC) get to take our creation and turn it in to something far less useful and enjoyable. Our purpose as humans is to PROGRESS. PROGRESS!!! Getting rid of net neutrality is the exact opposite. It is a step backwards for mankind. It truly depresses me that there are people who think this is a good idea. It's not.
—Alex Proudfit, Long Beach, CA

To the FCC, I strongly urge you to preserve the freedom of the internet and to protect its benefits using another method besides more payment requirements from hard working men and women. An open internet means more business and economy that otherwise will not exist. It also means any young graduate may put his or her work and information on an openly accessible source for all potential employers to see. If this resource becomes limited, a lot of business will stop and scarce jobs will become scarcer. All internet providers are already being payed by every individual and business connected to the internet, and I do not see a valid reason to give them paid control over peoples content they do not own.

That appear every time you visite the site as a reminder of this. But for most site, it would be better to have net neutrality ! Whit this rule away, some site could take advantage of young kids and there could be some chaos at some point and cause more trouble. The net is already a mess, this rule less in there could make it worse

The internet is too expansive and become to much apart of the world we live in, that to prevent people from accessing certain sites, or anything else is grossly unfair, capitalist, and classist, in other words, telling people only the rich can have access to things that are fun, educational, or interesting. The amount of people who now have to rely on things like netflix of hulu as the only form of entertainment is growing, and they would have no access to news or anything else that would give them the ability to make informed decisions on things such as voting, or government elections.

As a college student, I'm already having to pay a lot for my education. And because of the cost, I'm doing my best to get the best grades possible and that often means that I'm spending a lot of time on the computer researching for assignments and the like. I have absolutely no desire to have to pay even more money to access the internet when I'm already as strapped for cash as it is, as opposed to most of my life where I had no issues getting what I needed from the internet. Net Neutrality is essential, and I hope that you can see why it needs to remain.

This is wrong. I deserve the right to internet the way it has always been - I pay a provider a fee and they allow me to connect to the internet. Instead now you're going to be filtering everything to make more money. I'm an artist. Net Neutrality is essential for people like me to keep websites and businesses alive. If you take this away from us you'll be killing so many small businesses and entrepreneurs - which will in turn hurt the economy and creative people at large. Aren't we supposed to be a country that protects the small businessman, who encourages the young person to begin something new and follow their dream? This is stealing that from Americans. Bring back Net Neutrality.
—Gabriela Cunningham, Muncie, IN

This is a majorly important issue if the Internet is to be kept a level playing field between small startups and big business - please, take a stand.
—Elena Sokoloski, Maumee, OH

Abolishing Net Neutrality is discriminatory on a social class level by not letting anyone be able to have access to specific websites. Only hosts and owners may make agreements of whether or not there should be additional fees to their set websites, making the internet more than just some simple form of communication.
—Kevin Hautz, Boyne City, MI

So the ffc wont let me see movies on Netflix on HD1080p without paying an extra fee. Well, ffc that cannot be so you see I have to disagree, and tell you that the Internet is free and should not ever be like what we know now as a TV. So don't kill net neutrality. I don't wanna live in that reality. So if you can reconsider your decision, there won't be any bitter feelings toward you in the many communities around the world in different countries even your city. My name is Josh and net neutrality has saved me. Over the last three years I have been jobless due to a heart condition that, just yesterday, at twenty-three, had me put in a pacemaker/defibrillator put in my vhest. The most supportive and understanding people I know beyond immediate family was able to be there through the power of net neutrality. In order to keep myself busy, I write stories with various friends and partners, and my Girlfriend currently living out of state, on sites such as Twitter, Tumblr, and most importantly, freeforums. These sites have given me a creative output to write, /with no need of monetary compensation/. Sites such as Skype, chatzy,and IRC have given me instant communication outlets with these, my closest friends. From a half-business standpoint, I also work for a news and opinion based site centered around pro wrestling, and over the last three years we've been able to find a consistent viewer pool and a certain amount of respect amongst our community for unbiased outlooks on a fandom that has become dominated by underdeveloped writers on sites such as Bleacher Report. We make enough money to pay for our site domain, and never have we recieved a check. Killing net neutrality and moving in your current format is not only going too kill the working man's attempts to run a site or interact productively, but it damn near breaks the basic rights within the constitution. This can be fixed with a more reasonable and less big money-friendly plan, but as it sits your current plan hurts every innocent internet consumer in this country and hurs their ability to create original contact or communicate with friends, family, and loved ones, and there is no excuse for that. So, please reconsider. Read between the lines of the bill and create something that won't leave poor families having to hyper-approach their internet usage. Move forward, not backward. Thank you for your time.
—Joshua Rushinock, Nuremberg, PA

Net neutrality is important, as part of the rights of the people. Obviously the way cable is handled isn't done well and losing net neutrality based on what permissions one is allowed is completely and utterly insane. The government doesn't have the right to ordain who has the access to what knowledge or information and they shouldn't have the access to do that with the internet either.
—Bethany Stultz, Greensboro, NC

There is absolutely no excuse for this to even have happened. The internet belongs to no one so no person, entity or business should ever be able to decide what we can and can't access as we please. Paying for it is bad enough with how much our world is structured around it. But now you're going to rip it to shreds so sniveling, money-grubbing fiends can decide how much to charge for something that practically runs itself. So you can penny pinch the vast majority of people who can barely afford it as it is? No. Stop it, stop this madness now. Why don't you people go make a bill for something we need and can use instead of continually restricting our every move with your asinine bureaucracy. SOPA, PIPA all that other stuff too. Get off your high horses and do something to help the common good and quit lining your wallets on our time.

The internet is one of the only 'free' thing that everyone had neutrally. It isn't fair if it ends up becoming limited because of some selfish reasons. Money should not be made after going after the one thing everyone has, it should be made by funding small company and making the world green, that is where a lot is going into. In fact, it can even save money over time if given the chance. Unfortunately, that isn't really what is going on in the minds right now. They would rather restrict and repress those that can't afford things by those who are restricting and repressing the people.
—Cindy Saldivar, Minneapolis, MN

—Kelsey Dodge, San Luis Obispo, CA

Not writing related, but this is incredibly important. While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain. -Morgan
—Jenifer, Rochester, NY

I am a college student, and I rely heavily on the internet for school. If I lose access to certain sites or have slow internet, it could cost me my grades. I cannot afford to pay extra, my family and I do not have the extra money. We have already had to discuss the possibility of canceling our internet service altogether because of the expense. If I don't have internet, it could be detrimental to my education.
—Holly Fowler, Poteau, OK

This is disgusting. And why? Do they even have a heart? Do they consider that some people HAVE to rely on the internet for their small business, or to publish and promote their artwork? Really what's the purpose of all this? Phone companies aren't going broke. My family alone pays over $500 a month for talk, text and 40gb of internet. We can't get wireless internet where we live so were forced to rely on Verizon for cell phone data, and a shitty Mi-fi hotspot that uses the same package out phones do. We shouldn't have to pay extra to visit certain sites when already pay a ridiculous amount just to have any access at all. Signed, a middle class college student whose parents work harder than you pricks ever dreamed of and still get screwed by large companies with nothing in mind but another way to scam and get more money.
—Fletcher Robinson, Evergreen, AL

Please no god no WHY
—David Ricardo, Cambridge, MA

To the folks at the FCC and to Chairman Wheeler, Like many Americans, I'm gravely concerned about the repercussions of net neutrality being lost. I applaud the OIC of 2010 and always will. The internet isn't like television air waves or even cable TV. It's not even really akin to our highway system. It's really a communications infrastructure - one that provides vital (and not-so-vital) communications across our country everyday. Allowing anyone to place restrictions on speed or direction of internet traffic is a danger - not just to our ability to spread information, but really to how we do business. Getting by in America is tough. Getting by running a small business is even tougher. Shackling the communication and transactions of small businesspeople is pretty much shackling of our economy. Keep at it, and let's open the roads of information again.
—Kit Young, Denton, TX

American, land of the FREE.
—Summitt Liu, Bar Harbor, ME

Please change this. We need this freedom and exchange of information more than we even realise. This issue is bigger than one country. It is a problem that affects the world. This is something that should be decided by the UN. They are the ones that made the access to the internet a human right. What you here is not breaking through the fence of that right, but bending and hoping that it will not break. Please for everyone out there that uses the web, keep the net neutral

—Matthew Brazell, ,

In regards to the stance for tiered internet services, the strongest argument against it is the success of so many companies in the era without it. While companies like Hulu, Netflix and larger bodies like Google and Yahoo can survive having to potentially absorb losses or increase the costs for services in order to assure the best performance, the start-ups looking to compete with them don't often have those options. In our current society, equal starting grounds online are one of the few places left that truly exists as a place for a up and comer to get enough of a leg up to compete with existing giants, something that is crucial for a competitive market. If Netflix had been forced to struggle against pay-walls in their infancy, it's not likely that they would be the success story they've become as an online start-up. In all honesty, I don't want net neutrality rules so that I can have faster streaming on Netflix; I want the next company willing to take a risk with a new type of product or service dependent on online connectivity to have just as good a chance of becoming a leader, or at least a competitor as well. If there was an honest reason that ending net neutrality would be a service to those outside the established online, then I would be far more open to the possibility of it's implementation. But currently, it only stands to service those who have already made it, and potenially cripple any others who would strive to achieve similar success of their own. For these reason, I sincerely ask of you to reconsider reinstating Net Neutrality, so that smaller services can continue to hope to one day be giants as well.
—Clifton Anthony Jackson, Cibolo, TX

As an independent filmmaker and as a young artist, the internet is not only a place for me to network, but a mostly free platform for me to show my work. Do NOT take this away from me. Freelance, self-employed and independent artists, writers, and business owners as well as people who depend on the internet to survive (i.e. self-help blogs, online help forums etc...) will drown without net neutrality. Just this once, give the little guy a chance.

Getting rid of net neutrality would widen the class gap even more than it already is. It would negatively impact nearly every community in the US.
—Kelcie Kruse, Tucson, AZ

There are no words to describe how horrible the decision was. Wow. Net Neutrality is a necessity, and it's time to listen to the people actually affected by such decisions, not the people trying to make a buck off of others.
—Becky Wallace, North Monmouth, ME

This ruling takes away the freedom of press and honestly, I'm ashamed that taking away net neutrality was even considered.
—Isabella Placeres, New Port Richey, FL

The internet should remain free as it is now. I understand that age related censorship and what certain age groups can stumble upon is a problem, but those decisions are up to parents as individuals, not the government or companies. This act may have been designed with the people's interests in mind, but be realistic. Companies will see this as a way to make more money, not a way to help children explore the internet safely, or as a way for creative minds lacking resources to share their brain children with the world. Please consider our voices and what this will really do to Internet users because there is currently no benefit for us if this law comes to pass.

—Liam Clinkscales, Wareham, MA

Fast lanes will destroy small businesses that operate online. A lack of net neutrality will isolate human beings from communicating. A lack of an open internet will ruin artists. There is no logical reason for this to stand. The only ones who will benefit from destroying net neutrality are the internet provider companies that will line their pockets.
—Katherine A Cobos, Phoenix, AZ

You simply cannot do this. So many people rely on the internet for their living, or keeping in touch with their friends, or their mental health. For many people, fast communication with loved ones via internet has kept them from committing suicide, and not everyone can afford to pay even more for the internet. You cannot take that away from them. Your big business is not worth peoples' lives.
—Brianna Doran-Moriarty, Evanston, IL

This is unacceptable. The internet is one of the only places that really is equal and everyone has a voice. This will ruin millions of people who rely on the internet for their occupation.

You know what, I'm not even surprised this verdict was chosen. The United States of America has been backwards and hypocritical of itself for years now. "The Freedom Land"? Right, where free people won't be able to use the internet because they aren't in the top 1% of America. Are you serious? This is unacceptable. And these are the types of people who are running the country right now. I'm so sick of it.

—Amber Betancourt, Richmond, TX

I do NOT believe ALL web content should be treated equally, but nor do I believe that we should hand all our power to service providers that have already committed minor abuses towards their consumers. We have too much freedom, but just because we need less doesn't mean we should hand it all away.

Restore net neutrality
—, Colorado Springs, CO

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. Killing Net Neutrality will destroy this wealth for millions of people. Even Europe has made it illegal to get rid of Net Neutrality; do we really want Europe to be the internet powerhouse? What happened to American innovation and progress? This is definitely a step backwards.
—Nicholas S. Greenlee, Broomfield, CO

Bring Net neutrality back.
—Veronica, Franklin, TN

As a student, an artist, a writer, an aspiring career woman, and a "normal" young adult- my education, career, well-being, and more rely on my ability to access the internet and its unlimited resources. There is so much more to the internet for people of my age (and those of every age) than just social networking: We rely on it for research, for keeping up with current events, for teaching ourselves many things, for WORK, for becoming more involved in society on a local/state/national/internati onal level, for finding artistic content that suits an individual's tastes that DOES NOT EXIST IN MANY PARTS OUTSIDE OF THE INTERNET, and for so much more. Net neutrality protects users of all demographics, and by allowing ISPs to discriminate/block any services is to create a classist issue (read: reducing public efficacy and worsening the economy) on a service that should be a universal right.
—Loyce Chin, Roseville, CA

The Internet is a communications service. Treat it like one.
—Kenan Anderson, Burnsville, MN

This is a country with many great opportunities open to all. Giving everyone from the ritchest to the poorest access to more things than in any other country in the world. If we do not restore net neutrality we have just lost something so important that levels the playing feel for all residents of this wonderful country.
—Yvette Bass, Oakland, CA

Businesses should have no right to interfere with citizen's right to communicate and restrict yours and my actions online for the sake of their own profit.

This was passed with out a verdict from the people, no taxation without representation I thought this battle was already won
—Elise Conklin, Grand Rapids, MI

If you look at the history of the internet. A "major initial motivation for both the ARPANET [precursor to internet] and the Internet was resource sharing... " Researchers and university professors eventually started to use it to stay connected and exchange information with others. By 1985 the "Internet was already well established as a technology supporting a broad community of researchers and developers, and was beginning to be used by other communities for daily computer communications." Federal agencies made and implemented several other policy decisions which shaped the Internet of today. ... To coordinate this sharing, the Federal Networking Council was formed The key thing is "SHARING". The internet was designed to 'share' resources and information. It was developed through grants from the federal government. Will FCC allow the people of the United States who helped pay (through taxes, etc.) to have the internet created that it will not longer be shared equally? The internet is an incredible resource for people of all ages and income brackets, where we can share our thoughts, knowledge, and creations with the world. By creating this fast lane system, the internet will no longer be an even, open playing field for all, but a system open to only the wealthiest classes. Please restore net neutrality and ensure that the entire public can continue to access information, entertainment, and other resources without discrimination.

net neutrality is something that is at the basis of how the internet functions and it isn't fair that once again corporations win just to deepen their pockets - this is one place where we can all connect and share at the same level - I will not accept that I will have to pay more to access certain sites - it goes against freedom of speech and the foundations of the net!

This is incredibly important. While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.

Please bring net neutrality back it's so important to so many people if any of you at the fcc use the internet on a daily basis you know how it annoying it is to have your internet slowed down so please please PLEASE bring this back
—Declan McClelland, Eugene, OR

As I understand this ruling, it means that businesses now have to pay extra to ISPs to have access to their websites through that ISP provided at a reasonable speed. If you don’t pay, users’ access to your website will be slowed to a crawl - so independent people and small businesses can forget about getting onto that high speed access tier. This means that the American internet is going to be firmly under the control of those who have the most money. You’ll only get to see the content of those who can pay the ISPs to provide access at a reasonable speed. This means that you can expect to see skewed representation of just about everything, with those bigger businesses who can afford to pay ISPs a premium for access deciding what you can and cannot read, view and consume on the internet. America was founded on freedom, and with the wealth splitting in the way it is in this nation...again I fear I will lose this freedom I have...because I think having money dictate what I see is not ok, it is not fair, and it is not free. I am telling my government that this ruling is Not Okay.

This is a disgrace. Net Neutrality absolutely needs to be a thing. Right now information is available to all, for free. By restricting access to those who can pay, we will further the gap between the haves and the have nots. Where will we draw the line? Why is it ok for a few companies to have a monopoly on almost all information reaching Americans today? Without Net Neutrality, we won't have any recourse to find information as we so desire. Communications companies absolutely will bury "insignificant" websites and the like. What's to stop them from repressing sites that give them bad reviews? I already pay for internet access. It is not fair to further increase my bill just so that I can continue to access the same sites. We, as Americans, will not and cannot stand for this. Net Neutrality must remain.
—Kaitlin Schwartzel, Columbia, MD

I am so outraged by this. Stop making a monopoly out of everything. This is one of the reasons people hate America.

Net neutrality is an important issue for me, because I believe that an open internet should be preserved for all. Internet already costs my family approximately $75 per month- an outrageous fee, if you ask me, because monopolies have cropped up. An "Internet Fast Lane" is ridiculous. That really just means there's going to be a slow lane for the rest of us- who can't afford to pay an extra thirty bucks per month. Restore net neutrality.

Not restoring net neutrality isn't about the money to what the companies might do to its customers, this is all about our right to express ourselves freely as humans we are, this is going to affect every single person who has access to the internet. Why should this change all of the sudden? Aren't ISP's already ripping off customers by applying high fees for its service when they can't even provide what the customer is laying for? Are you really going to kill out freedom just so a few CEOs can make more money when they're already billionaires? People won't stop until this gets straighten out.

—N Dias, Jersey City, NJ

This will be the beginning of internet providers being able to LIMIT the information we have access to, controlling what sites we can access quickly and what sites we can't access at all, which will lead to a seriously unbalanced source of information. This is bordering on violating basic rights, and probably will cross that line shortly after going into effect. These provider monopolies MUST BE REINED IN.
—Amber Neulinger, Clovis, CA

This is awful, and ridiculous.
—Janee Rector, Gold Canyon, AZ

I can't even afford to pay for internet to get schoolwork done I definitely won't be able to pay to get on specific sites. Not only does this take a massive toll on small businesses and independent companies, it will take away copious amounts of money from American citizens to access websites they would normally. If I have to pay to use certain sites, even educational ones, why even have internet in the first place? This ruins the concept of the internet as a cultural outlet for people of the United States. If one has to pay for internet, why even use the internet? Do us all a favor and reinstate net neutrality. After all, do we really want to implicate internet stamps as well as food stamps?

I think slowing down the internet is downright stupid. The internet is a large resource for many people; especially students. Even if the information may not always be correct, it's definitely a big help for projects and the like. Not only that but people connect over the internet. Neither the consumer nor the provider of information should be blocked for any reason to access the Public Utility of the Internet. To stifle that flow of information in any way is to cripple the constant flow of creativity, innovation, and imagination that we have been enjoying till now. Because remember, for ever cat video and rambling blog, there is a Wikipedia, Youtube, and collaboration between two individuals in different countries to make something wonderful.
—Eric Nunes, Brentwood, CA

This ruling will not lead to a more robust market. Verizon and its competitors have a history of cooperative plan and price fixing with the sole intent of maximizing costs while minimizing service. With this ruling, neither Verizon, nor its competitors have no incentive to offer unrestricted, free access to what their networks are capable of. Their strongest incentive is to offer exactly what Verizon will offer - itemized "packages" that force users to pay once for the service, and again to use the service. This ruling encourages double-dipping of the worst sort, and places our country even farther behind the many nations with better developed communications architectures. The free market cannot solve this problem under the current circumstances, as there is, as I have said before, no incentive on behalf of telecommunications companies to provide service that is adequate for the communications needs of our nation. Again, their only incentive is to maximize profits by minimizing the available service. If you doubt my claims, there's plenty of precedent for Verizon's ill will towards its customers - for example, they fought tooth and claw to prevent customers from using third party "tethering" software, just so they could force their own "tethering" package on its own customers - a package which offered absolutely no improved access to their network. You ought to remember this: http://www.cnet.com/news/what- verizons-fcc-tethering-settlem ent-means-to-you-faq/ Double dipping. Double dipping! It's bad for the consumer, bad for the market, and bad for the country!

Why, you money grubbing freaks
—Michaela Lynn Harding, Norman, OK

If this ruling stands you can forget about small online businesses starting up.
—Jacob Knostman, Houston, TX

This is so wrong. How will our free United States be able to support the online artists who use the Internet to bring about their dream? If this happens I will not be able to stay in the US and promote my business.
—Mylisa Krueger, Gresham, OR

The free nature of the internet is what makes it the wonderful, and occasionally terrible, thing it is today. but the moment you start limiting it, all that freedom goes away.

I'm a poor college student, I can't afford to pay out my ass just to look at the internet. This is discriminatory and WRONG.
—Bailey, Athens, OH

People already pay to have internet access, people pay to live. Some people can hardly afford to live in their homes anymore. This is horrible and stupid and reidcklous. This is going to ruin the web for everything and everybody, this is a terrible idea and needs to be stopped ASAP. Seriously, what the fuck are the people who came up with this thinking?!
—Rachel, Brick, NJ

RESTORE IT
—Lari Zhang, ,

Net Neutrality is exceedingly important to the free market and to the spread of information, which means it is exceedingly important to the preservation of democracy. Please take a stand and keep broadband networks available to everyone, not just big companies and the rich.
—Kathleen Persinger, Mission Viejo, CA

Please don't do this.
—Tamara Killorin, San Antonio, TX

Broke college students need the internet to do research for our essays and projects, and what you've done has/will make it very difficult for young adults like me to research effectively. Because there's more to researching something than reading articles. It's about looking at pictures and graphs and video clips to figure out how and why stuff works the way it does and what the real-world applications are. I should not have to decide whether to use what little money I have for food or a decent internet speed just because some big company thinks they need a fast lane.
—Melanie, ,

Fuck 12
—Thomas Staggs, Statesboro, GA

this is ridiculous.
—Melanie Love, Inglewood, CA

not only do we lose entertainment sites such as tumblr and youtube, we lose educational websites. how many schools depend on the internet for giving students their best opportunities for learning? how am i supposed to apply for college if i can't research the college first?
—Erised, Kalispell, MT

Please do not remove net neutrality it will end the internet as we know it.

—Nickolas Flannery, Mustang, OK

Our generation is criticized for being uninvolved and lazy, but when we finally stand up for something we are ignored. Well we won't fo down without a fight
—Lissa Price-Moore, Cranford, NJ

This is ridiculous. Most people would rather limit their use than pay for a website.
—Lexi Kilsdonk, Appleton, WI

It is ridiculous that websites will only be limited to those who can afford them.The internet is a necessity for a lot of people, and to take that away from us is sickening. I can't even afford cable, I use over the air television, and the idea of having to scrape up money in order to afford my usage of the websites I visit is unrealistic. This whole thing is a prime example of greed in humanity. Pathetic.
—Ida, Hopkins, MN

Keep the government out of the internet!!
—Angela Welsh, ,

It's difficult enough to function as a student today, seeing as we're pretty much at least 50% dependent on services the internet provides for our education by my estimation, depending on the person and the college. So many students are at one time trying to access the net on the same servers, many times through the same router, that our internet connection is slow enough already, which inhibits our intellectual growth, delays our work and even our classes, and raises our stress levels through the roof. Speaking of stress, how about our grades? An overwhelming and increasing number of colleges and high schools host important graded test and project materials on internet platforms now. The majority of which are timed and one try only. Slow or poor connection already causes time outs and delays on such programs there are very costly to the over all grade of the student. And now certain individuals are going to be allowed to interfere with internet connections and make them slower? Unbelievable. And this is only one example of why this is ultimately a very terrible decision in the long run. Please take this and the many more valid examples I am sure are being received under serious consideration.
—Erin Henry, Philadelphia, PA

Please don't take something as useful as the internet away. Not only is it a good for keeping in touch with loved ones, but it is also an amazing way to keep up with important subjects.

Don't let them take what we have away and change it.
—The Unknown, ,

The people will not allow this.
—Abel, El Paso, TX

Please keep the internet the way we love it! Revive net neutrality!
—Renee Ward, Lewiston, ID

Please protect the internet from this. EVERYONE should have access to the internet no matter their income (some people cannot afford to pay for this, and they should have the right to use the internet just like everyone else without being put in a slow lane). The internet is such a useful tool to help educate and build our society. By allowing this you are cutting off people who could benefit from the unlimited data the internet provides at the expense of what? Because companies want more money? I don't think so. It's bad enough we have to put ourselves in debt just to get an education, but to charge us more to be able to use the internet at speeds we already pay more for in the first place is ridiculous. I am begging you to correct this, please. For the sake of our future generations.
—JN Adams, Nixa, MO

how many times do we have to try to say this is not ok before anyone in the govt believes it?
—C C, Boston, MA

VIVA LA REVOLUTION
—Jane Crocker, Blowing Rock, NC

The United States is already being held back the high costs and slower speeds that are offered to us by telecommunications companies both big and small. The lack of competition in a market that desperately needs it has marred progress that even ISPs in Europe have made way beyond us. Net neutrality is necessary to level the playing field for better competition among ISPs. Please don't cause us to fall even farther behind because of the greed of a select few seemingly overrides the freedom of millions.
—Aaron Gaskill, Las Cruces, NM

Sad face. Really angry sad face.

—Colleen, Elmhurst, IL

Most of us use the internet to help communicate our thoughts, ideas, and values. It is a system of free speech, and thus should cost no more than the air in our lungs that we use to push words from our mouths to proclaim how we feel.
—Makayla Cichosz-King, Libby, MT

There is no reason to get rid of Net Neutrally. You are going to destroy the economy and also be taking a lot of people's human right of the internet cause a lot of us already have trouble affording it.

—Emilee Atkins, Charlestown, IN

The Internet needs to remain a neutral entity. It represents a free world. Freedom goes hand in hand with the good and the bad, but limiting the good because of the bad is still a removal of freedom. Please do not limit the peoples freedom!
—Joshua Regan, ,

I want internet service providers classified as common carriers.
—Monika Parks, Arcata, CA

If I have any hope of surviving in this new entrepreneurial late-capitalist economy we've found ourselves in, I'm going to need the internet to be free and equal. I am sure I'm not alone in this. The cards are stacked for people as is. Don't make things even harder.
—James Curry, Portland, OR

Net neutrality has provided oppressed minorities with the space and the tools to network and organize for the benefit of their communities. It has allowed citizens to subvert the death of American journalism and access a free flow of first-person accounts and unbiased information. There are students who could not afford their education without the free textbooks they found online. There are survivors of trauma who would not be with us today without the communities they found online. There are elected officials who would not be in power without the organizing power of citizens through the FREE web. The internet had the potential to be our greatest technology, to allow all of us to freely share the full sum of human knowledge and experience, and you have wounded it.
—Isaac Haynes Sanstad, Berkeley, CA

Net neutrality is SO. IMPORTANT. Please think this through.

—Benjamin Hardy, Saint Joseph, MO

Leave the internet as it has always been. Free and open, as it should be. We are not going to stand by and be forced to pay more for the same of what we have always had. This is an outrage and it cannot continue!
—Rene Kilfoy, ,

The internet is mankind's greatest tool for the sharing of ideas, education, and a vital asset of small American businesses. Don't let ISPs destroy this valuable resource.
—Cassandra Aloisi, Fairfax, CA

The internet is something in our day and age that is a necessity in life. Homework, keeping in contact with friends and family, finding long lost family and friends, information at your fingertips. You can't just expect people to shell out money at the drop of a hat for this. Especially considering many wont even be able to afford it. Internet is a necessity in this era. Not a privilege to those who can afford it by your standards.
—Valerie Smith, Medford, NY

Taking away net neutrality violates our rights. Please listen to the people speaking out.
—Mary Williams, Charlotte, NC

—Audrey, Victorville, CA

This is outrageous. You are selling our freedom in this country to the highest bidder and you all must know exactly what your doing. Your supposed concern for the majority of Americans in this country is a lie. You only care about the men who rule this oligarchy. I don't even know why I'm writing this cause no one with any authority is going to read it.
—Andrew Hickman, Indianapolis, IN

I'll just abandon the internet and find something else to do if this changes just to suit corporate greed.
—Nicholas Alexander Pennington, Reynoldsburg, OH

This is ridiculous and y'all know it is. Stop letting greed supersede the greater good.
—Jill Shrum, Athens, GA

Net Neutrality Is Vital to the way our system of communications works. It is a money-grabbing act to attempt to remove it. We need this to ensure that information is spread evenly to all; So that No one company can filter what sorts of information is given to what demographic of the people. We need it so that we cannot have our right to knowledge denied as a fiscal maneuver.. We need net neutrality so that we do not lose yet another freedom.
—Rumi Kallenbach, Birmingham, AL

We pay for internet already, which actually was something my family had to work hard to get just so I can do my homework, because we make a little over the income where you get free things. Taking away that right to access a wealth of information is utterly ridiculous in this day and age of technology. Its infuriating that big companies think they can buy out every one who gets in their way of making money. When did America become "for the large wealthy corporation by the large wealthy corporation"?
—Gwen Robison, Littleton, CO

are u fuckin kidding me m8
—Elizabeth, Provo, UT

Please don't do this! This will affect everyone in a negative way. The internet is the last place on earth where everything's equal. For the love of all that is good, please bring it back.
—Sophia, Provo, UT

Fuck this shit law. You're just making people have less freedom so the government can have more money. You're taking money from people who need it. The internet is a prize to a lot of people. Don't ruin that.
—Sam, Plainfield, IL

Do the right thing. Listen to the people.
—Catherine Leth, Brooklyn, NY

This is disgusting. Greed at its worst.
—Caitlin N, Tucson, AZ

This is preposterous, this isn't freedom. Allowing this to go by without a glance is impossible and unreasonable. They're trying to take away our basic rights of freedom of speech and expression and making us pay for it! I will not allow this to happen, I am standing up for what I believe in. This needs to stop.

The Internet makes it possible for everyone in the world to connect and learn and grow. Destroying net neutrality will destroy this beautiful thing we've all created.
—Madison, Pocatello, ID

I'm not sure if you realize this, FCC, but the world is turning to use the internet for everything. Charging citizens for this is incredibly wrong as so many of us are broke because of college and the horrible thing known as minimum wage. Taking net neutrality away is not going to help anyone and honestly, those companies pushing for this have enough money already. They dont need it. Dont let net neutrality end.

Please no! While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. If the Net Neutrality is eliminated we are not going to have that place when we can express ourselves.
—Giselle Galarraga, ,

There is absolutely no need for an internet fast lane. It will hurt companies and nonprofit organizations by creating unnecessary expenses. It will be annoying for internet users, and financially detrimental, especially if websites try to pass the cost of the fast lane on to the users. Companies such as Verizon already make plenty of profit off their existing products, if they want to make more money, they should come up with something new instead.

—Jacob Mora, Albuquerque, NM

It is simple. You can not create a tiered system of internet. The whole basis of the internet is that all websites have equal opportunity to run. Tiering based on who can afford to pay ISP's and who can not is ignorant. Mainstream companies such as verizon and comcast will very clearly make sure that they are put in the 'fast lane' leaving those who can not afford to pay in the 'slow lane'. Who is anyone to decide how the internet is run. The whole purpose if the internet is EQUAL OPPORTUNITY. Not bias based on wealth of a company.
—Darienne Montanaro, Holtsville, NY

Tired of seeing companies suck the very life out of anything and everything. If this keeps going I'll want nothing to do with this company again.
—Heather, Oldsmar, FL

The internet is an amazing service that allows information to be spread instantaneously throughout the world. Do not let corporations limit this. Everyone is already stretching every last penny; to give companies the power to ruin this amazing network would be an absolute crime.
—Laura, Chesterton, IN

This was a terrible idea from the start. Seriously.

Please don't.
—Sam Bolt, Champlin, MN

Leave the internet a free neutraj entity!
—Alice Rowe, Vancouver, WA

I live in an area where, for sub par internet access, I pay more than people living down in the lower 48 (Alaska, btw). My mother pays less than 70$ for the plan I'm paying 185$ a month for, but there's nothing else. There's a monopoly on the cable in the area. Thanks to this, I'm going to end up paying more on a basic necessity. Things like 'resumes' are submitted entirely online now. Things like 'job applications' are entirely online. The internet isn't supposed to be like a cable internet plan. It's supposed to be a free, neutral system. I will be finding out how my congressmen voted on this particular bill and writing them each a letter based on that.

—Raven pearle, Santa Maria, CA

The internet is the WORLD WIDE WEB. There should not be limitations set on something that is meant to provide easy access to information across the globe. That just discriminates more against the haves and have-nots on who can afford to receive more information conveniently. I thought we were done with having to deal with dial-up speeds in the '90s when tech experts successfully created broadband internet. Why force those who can't afford basic internet rights back into the past?
—Vanessa, Evanston, IL

Please protect the exchange of ideas across all socioeconomic groups. Please consider the importance of a neutral internet to freelance artists, growing musicians, webcomic creators, and anyone else who uses a neutral internet to spread their creations farther than could have been imagined before.
—Lauren Chapa, Bowie, MD

This isn't right. The internet is meant for the freedom of knowledge, spreading ideas and thoughts with others around the world. It's not something to make money off of.
—Denise Gelter, Amelia, OH

Do not allow these corporations to enlarge the digital divide. It's already hard enough to afford half way decent internet. If this is allowed to happen millions of people will be angered. There will probably be protests. Internet as we know it will cease to exist. I for one will probably no longer be able to afford it. I will essentially be cut off from the rest of the world and upperclass citizens will dominate the business world because they can afford the technology.
—Julie K., Schnecksville, PA

—Jacob Ruocco, Spring, TX

Net Neutrality is VITAL to the free, unhindered spread of information that is necessary in a democratic society. By giving ISPs the authority to dictate what sites will be accessible to whom, this freedom of information will become severely restricted. Low-income citizens in search of work will be unable to find it online, small businesses will be unable to advertise online without paying a hefty sum, companies like Verizon will essentially be given the right to extort its customers. This cannot stand. Please, for the sake of American citizens everywhere, keep the internet free.

—Franklin Smith, Willingboro, NJ

We've never had anything like the internet before. Having information so widely available to anyone and to be able to connect with people around the world freely as you see fit. Now people are trying to kill it. The internet killed TV and now they want to make the internet like TV. They make enough money by making us pay for internet and websites make money from the ads. Make us pay more and suddenly people might stop using the internet or won't be able to afford to go to some websites that may have ads which will drop the income of such sites and slowly kill them all one by one all for the sake of trying to squeeze more out of us. This is all just sick. End this.

First of all, I can only start off by saying how dare you. The Internet isn't something to market off and profit from. It shouldn't be split up and sold out like land or television channels, it should not be changed from where it was. Secondly, I want to ask you what gives you the right to police the Internet? WWW stands for 'world-wide web', in other words, this decision does not affect Americans solely, it affects all world citizens and that isn't fair. America does not have anymore right to police the government, as it does to put up a toll booth for ships in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean.

Comcast provides internet service and Cable service. Netflix and services like it are taking viewership and profit out of cable TV. Suddenly, Comcast is able to charge Netflix more money for increased bandwidth. Netflix either passes that cost on to its consumers or provides lower quality service, and those consumers start leaving Netflix. Meanwhile, Comcast's online streaming service is high-speed and free, and who has a monopoly? The internet needs to be regulated like a communications service, free and neutral.

As an artist whose entire customer base is online, the end of net neutrality would be the end of my career. If my customers can't afford to see my site then I can't afford to pay my rent. It isn't a matter of the internet as entertainment, it's a matter of the internet as my livelihood.
—Ivy Stark, Gaithersburg, MD

Please please PLEASE do not make the internet like TV. Think about the people who can barely afford the internet and everything we learn from it daily. Think about people in third world countries who want it to teach their kids in their native language, but their ISP won't let them because they didn't pay them enough. Think of the entrepreneurs who make their living through the Internet, who will no longer be able to reach a larger number of people because their ISP will discriminate against them. PLEASE DO NOT MAKE ISPS LIKE PEOPLE; ISPS SHOULD NOT BE ABLE TO DISCRIMINATE.

Who the hell are you to make me pay more to use sites that I love? I'm already strapped for cash as it is. If this passes, Congress, you're all as good as thieves. Money hungry wolves.
—Johanna Barker, Magnolia, TX

Why should I have to pay extra for the internet when I'm already paying a monthly bill to just use the internet in the first place? Why should I have to pay to use the websites that I enjoy? The internet was made to communicate with the world, not for the government to take it and make it a market. I refuse to do this, restore the Net Neutrality Rules! —Taru Turkki, ,

This is not fair.
—Norma Chavez, Chandler, AZ

This isn't just a problem of not having access to entertaining social media. This push to strike down net neutrality is another example of the growing inequality in our country. The thought of allowing this partnership between the government and big businesses that are already approaching monopolistic levels of power over access to the internet and similar communication platforms makes for yet another indication that the American political system responds to money, not to the people. The internet is another form of infrastructure. Providing virtually free access to it is the same as investing in more ways of improving America as a whole. Taking away that free access is like narrowing a ten lane highway that's congested even when it's not rush hour to a six lane highway to make way for a new corporate store location just for kicks and the money that that corporation is willing to fork out to the governmental agency in charge of the highway. That highway will be too small, people will get ticked off, and people will end up moving away. That decision will take an arm and a leg to fix, and the damage will never be repaired completely as those people who moved away will not want to come back to a place crazy enough to take bribes from big companies to take away public services that are necessary for the community to exist as a whole. Taking away access to the internet we have now is the same as narrowing that highway; you make infrastructure bigger, not smaller, or there's going to be more than just a slight problem. The majority of Americans will have one less way to pursue the American Dream. For many American's forced to live hand-to-mouth in an economy that has only made a vague attempt at recovery, the internet provides a means of distraction from everyday stress and an opportunity to make money from the comfort of one's own home. Many of the American's who rely on part or all of their income from online transactions will be unable to compete with corporations. They won't have a chance. An end to net neutrality will be an end to the instantaneous free transfer of ideas across the globe. Limiting access to the internet means that artistic genius, already strapped for cash in the best of circumstances, will be denied the opportunity to reach people around the globe. Artists will go back to pawning art on street corners and hoping to make enough cash to rent space for an art exhibit. Paying arbitrary fees just to level the internet playing field will also mean that scientific progress will grind to a halt as access to free research papers will no longer be free and new information and ideas disappear from the web as research grants go increasingly to pay for access to the internet. Less money from research grants will be used towards scientific progress and increasingly used to maintain the status quo. New opportunities for economic growth will be limited to those who can already pay for it. The rich will get richer. Our choices as consumers will narrow to big brands and alternatives to forking over big bucks for a questionable quality product will dwindle. Americans won't have a choice anymore who their possessions come from or what kind of quality. The only things available will be provided by corporations who have enough money to censor people who might know negative aspects about the product, effectively keeping Americans in the dark and indirectly removing regulations enforced by internet denizens that control product quality though the unspoken threat of bad product reviews. Censorship will become commonplace, and will be publicly sanctioned by the government. In the end, we will become isolated from the rest of the world, a world that will have equal access to the world wide web and the ideas that stem from it, and our already dwindling international presence will fade into obscurity as other countries progress into the future leaving America in the dust. In other words, the end to net neutrality will be severely cripple the economy, limit our progress as a society, indicate to the rest of the world that America is just a pinch short of falling apart at the seams, and lead to more inequality. The American Dream will cease to be even a dream as we place more emphasis on monetary clout rather than the inherent merits of those who have access to the internet. The only ones that will benefit from the end of net neutrality will be the companies that are profiting from premium fees. Everyone else will be hurt. The country as a whole will be hurt. The American poeple will be hurt. The government will be hurt and in the future will have to make up for the losses this change will impose upon the American people. America will stagnate while the rest of the world moves on.

Net neutrality is needed.
—Matt North, Minneapolis, MN

The internet has created strong bonds with people around the world, and I feel that this would greatly reduce those kinds of bonds from happening. Plus, not many people have the funds to purchase a faster connection. So getting rid of Net Neutrality would mean that people would barely, or not at all, have a chance to create sites that would benefit everyone. And for a lot of people, the internet is a chance for them to escape from the troubles they've been facing in outside world. I know I've had my share of bad days, and one of the very few things that have been able to help me is going on the internet, watch a few videos, check up with friends, and just forget about all the stress of the day. So please, all I ask is for Net Neutrality to please stay in effect.
—Devin Tucker, Brighton, MI

Letting this pass not only cripples small businesses, but further drives ruin to the economy. Some people are barely making enough to pay for food let along a net connection. By makeing compaines able to jack-up the price just to reach the net, you'll see any who can't afford it just stop using all together. And you big-business gurus will be losing out on people shopping online, reading new articles, etc. You're shooting yourselves in the foot on this one. Undo the verdict before you cause the damage.
—Robbert conan, New York, NY

We already have to pay for wifi to actually access the internet, so why are you making us pay for "packages"? I shouldn't have to pay for the internet like I have to pay for my tv.

Really? Really?? I thought this was a government of the people...I guess this just proves that this is a government of Big Corporations With No New Visions Ever.
—Allison Cheng, Augusta, GA

Companies shouldn't be able to dictate what speeds they give to certain websites and be able to ban certain websites if I don't pay more isn't fair to the user. That'd be like if the water company gave me a cup of water to do dishes, but gallons upon of water to take a shower. If I want equal water between the two, I'm gonna need to pay more. An electric company shouldn't be able to turn off TV because they don't want that, they want me to charge my laptop. If I want to have both, then I'm gonna have to pay more.Same thing, different company. Imagine me going down a highway at 70 mph. Suddenly, a cop pulls me over. He says Im at the limit, but if I wanna keep going at that speed, Ill have to pay him. If I say no? He tells me that I can only go 40 mph now until I pay more for the same speed that I used to have. That's from the perspective of the websites. Some won't be able to have the luxury of a fast line, or how I would call it, "It's not fast, just more expensive."
—Matko Sabic, Waterloo, IA

The internet isn't something any one country has the right to monopolize. It's a medium for people all over the world to connect and interact via. people won't be able to pay for this extra fee, and they shouldn't have to! America is a huge nation, with a lot of presence. If this happens there, it's highly likely to start a trend in other countries and I don't want that. I don't want my friends overseas to be secluded and cut off from me because of some stupid, unnecessary cost.

The Internet is one of the greatest tools for disseminating information and knowledge, and acts as an equal forum for everyone regardless of your wealth or social status. It is so important that we keep it this way. Tim Berners Lee gave us the Internet free, for everyone. Slowing parts of it down to try and squeeze money out of it would be a horrible mistake and would completely disregard the spirit in which the Internet was created. We have come so far technologically and as a society since the rapid development of the Internet in the 90s. Why would we ever want to obstruct that incredible potential for growth? Don't let the greed of a few deny everyone else's access to free and easy information. Please do everything you can to secure the open internet.
—Laura Keegan, ,

Net neutrality is essential to the free exchange of information that is the ideal of the internet. Allowing companies to manipulate the access of millions for profit is a series breach of ethics, as well as undermines every business that turns to the internet for customers and support. Net neutrality is the only foundation that can support the continued growth and prosperity of the Internet itself.

People spend thousands of dollars in schools to learn how to make, run or support online businesses and allowing certain companies to charge premiums in order for popular services to get the best services stunts what students spend money (and government grant money) to learn. The internet is supposed to be a tool that connects people to information and other people. Killing net neutrality is like holding websites hostage so that people can only use them if they pay the ransom. It's borderline censorship! I thought this was the US: land of the free, country of dreams where anyone can aspire to great heights. But censoring the internet isn't what the US would do. It's what NORTH KOREA has already done. Is North Korea our new role model?!
—Paige Dashiell, Nampa, ID

The internet is for everyone and it should be OUR decision how to use it and which sites we want to be on. Companies shouldn't be able to restrict our access of the internet. It's against our rights to freedom. We shouldn't have to pay to have highspeed internet when we already pay for having the internet in the first place. This goes against everything the internet is supposed to be used for. Stop making it so the rich keep getting richer and poor keep getting poorer.
—Kitana Lunara, Idaho Falls, ID

please don't do this. the best part about the internet is the freedom. everyone can connect no matter how much money they have in the pocket (even for free in lots of places like libraries) and making it basically like television kills that idea and the uniqueness the internet brings everyone

Net neutrality isn't only important to the avid blogger or the freelancer, it is important to every person who has enjoyed years of (fundamentally) free information no matter what the size of the entity posting it. Net Neutrality is crucial in online communities that are changing the world. Youtube, Facebook, Twitter and Tumblr are all new and exciting ways the world can communicate, interact and share ideas. The internet is the start of something amazing- and by putting all of this new interesting valuable content in the "slow lane" while only allowing rich websites to be funded in the fast lane is destroying what we have come to know and love as the internet- a place where everyone is equal, no matter your background where you can share opinions and ideas and discuss with people from all kinds of different place and backgrounds. It's like nothing that has ever happened before and by getting rid of net neutrality, you are ruining that. You are taking away the beautiful beginning of communities and an era that we could have seen, an era that is like no other, one where we can learn and discuss with youtube videos and form opinions and become more aware and educated members of society. Please don't take this away from us.

Net neutrality is a simple concept... and we don't price concepts! So why should this one be priced?
—Noah Pettinari, Portland, OR

Canceling net neutrality literally jeopardizes an entire industry. It takes away the ability for people of ay economic level to supplement their income. It takes away peoples' ability to expand or develop their career on their own. Most sickening, taking away net neutrality takes away any person's ability to enhance their education freely, and takes away an educator's ability to expand their classroom through the creative space of the internet. Not protecting this is a very bad thing. This is not just a bunch of nerds throwing a fit because their cat videos will slow down, this will destroy the development and economy of the next generation.
—Angela tegge, Corona, CA

I already pay loads of money for my decent internet, and overages due to data caps, just so that i can do my job and earn enough money to pay the bills. Please restore Net Neutrality. Please, net neutrality is essential. Keep the internet open, accessible, reliable, and affordable.
—Jenny Adkins, West Bend, WI

The Internet is the only true form of democracy we still have. This is absolutely ridiculous that this decision was made- people use the Internet for all sorts of things, some creating their own content and websites for self-promotion and to share their work with the world. —Ross Herrell, Castle Rock, CO

We use the internet everyday. Let us not be assholes to each other and cause something as terrible as this. The AOL dial up days are long gone now, this is unacceptable for everyone who uses the internet, even researchers and people who have online jobs and play video games. You will upset every type of internet user out there. Please leave the internet as is, and only allow improvements. It's bad enough PRISM exists, and it's illegal, so should this action. This generation is getting ridiculous in all aspects and it is time to balance things, again. This is a greedy move, and it's absolutely unnecessary, and unacceptable on all acounts.
—Mark Wright, Phoenix, AZ

The internet is the universal tool for creativity and innovation on all levels of society which should not be limited. The internet should now be considered a necessity, important to all who want to efficiently interact in the tech age. Free the internet!
—Waylon Thomas, Carmel, CA

"Land of the Free." Free my ass. There is nothing free about this country.
—Christine, Sacramento, CA

The internet is the last remaining safe haven for freedom of speech.
—Aaron Burger, Huxley, IA

Many people and businesses rely on the internet and websites to conduct business and keeping in touch with loved ones and friends that are long distance. I can't believe you're going to make it excessively difficult for people to access the internet. What happens to college students? The children? How are we going to use the internet to research for our classes if we can't afford to pay outrageous amounts for access to websites? Have the FCC even thought about it for a second with the SLIGHTEST hint of compassion? This the result of corporate greed. Please protect our nations communication infrastructure. Take the necessary steps to keep broadband networks open, accessible, and reliable and affordable for EVERYONE. Restore the net neutrality rules. Please. Everyone needs net neutrality.
—Mariah Keller, Olympia, WA

Fuck that bullshit, I just wanna use the internet. I'm a college kid, I'm broke enough. Let me get a goddamn education and not have to pay for ONE god damn thing
—Caitlin, Fort Myers, FL

It is entirely unacceptable that the internet be treated as anything other than a telecommunications service, a public service. As a small business owner, this decision tells me that I will no longer be able to garner clientele via the internet as I will not be able to pay extra to each internet provider to allow my site to load at useable speeds. I guess we're about to find out what happens to a home web design business when the web becomes unusable.

Please please please please PLEASE restore Net Neutrality!!!!!!!
—Lizzie, Littleton, CO

This ruling from the court is disgusting. We need not only net neutrality, but to have the internet established as a public utility. Much of modern society is simply inaccessible without the internet, so we're already pretty much at the mercy of companies that really prefer to jerk the public around a bit. With instant messaging, twitter, facebook and all the other available means of communication made possible by the internet, the notion that the FCC can't regulate it as a communications service is absurd.

The internet was created to be a way to connect people on a basic and fairly even level. To make people pay like this is a complete disregard for what the internet stands for! THE INTERNET IS NOT LIKE TELEVISION! This better change or you will have a lot of pissed off people on your hands. Many of the people who vote on this have money to spare so they may not have to worry about it but the rest of us do!

Do not take our freedom away from us. The United States of America stands for freedom does it not? If have the freedom to pay for internet communications, now you want to make the American people pay more for this general freedom that we all enjoy? Do not perpetuate the socioeconomic caste system any further than it already is. Do not take away American peoples freedom to access information and communication. Do not allow this country to fully become the corporate wasteland that we already see it to be. Believe in this country, be a part of this country. Resource partitioning should not apply to the internet, the internet is not a limited resource. Have some dignity. Remember your humanity.

I am highly against this rule. Do these companies not make enough money as it is that they have to drain us of our last dollar? Some of the users of the internets rely on these platforms to make money themselves! With the economy being bad, some if us don't have a choice! Youtubers, free lance artists, bloggers, etc. Rely on the internet to make money on the World Wide Web. The government and companies are taking this away from us! I don't think it's fair for them to slow down people's use if the internet for certain websites just because we cannot afford to pay the fee! This is why we pay our monthly high speed bill! I'm not in anyway implying to tack on an extra charge to this bill. It should be more than enough for them! I'm sick and tired of how almost everything comes down to money. Soon we will be charged for breathing! Hell, we are already charged for water.

The internet provides a way for people to speak. It gives us FREEDOM OF SPEECH and this action monopolizes the internet in a way that takes this freedom away from us. Students from high school to college age use social networking like tumblr or reddit to put out artwork and thoughts and...basically, to be heard in a way that merely speaking doesn't provide. Teens and young adults are not listened to (this includes "kids" over eighteen) and treated as if they have no valid opinions and/or their opinions are not fully formed. This removal of their, and our, protection from the further capitalization of the internet in such a way that will destroy young people's ability to explore the internet and world will severely harm the growth of young people and take away their, and everyone’s, freedom of speech.
—Helen Rooker, Hartland, VT

this is just ridiculous , ISPs are going to have total control over what we can use and see on the internet. this is going to cause many problems unless regulations go back to the way they were.
—Luis, Lake Elsinore, CA

The web is to educate and entertain. If you take that resource away, it's like shutting down a library or a museum.
—Jessica Kristine Matas, Livermore, CA

Don't kill the American dream for millions of average Americans who do business online. Doing away with net neutrality will stunt any growth and innovation and stagnate the arts and music industries. Do something good for once, you (cable companies and the FCC) can't possibly need any more money.
—Andrew Thompson, Quincy, MA

Everyone deserves the right to the internet; the poor, the middle class, the wealthy. We, the middle and lower class, should not lose our rights to the internet because of the wealthy, and we should have accessible, reliable, and affordable broadbands. Everyone deserves this, and some people need it for their jobs--to earn money.

How can you you attempt to control and cut up the internet like so much meat, or is corporate gluttony without any comprehension abilities? The internet is a free space for people from all over the world to spread ideas and share interactions. It is a force of unification. It may be flawed but it is not nearly as flawed systems that go unchecked, or does the government have select vision and only notices potential dollar signs? Though I understand that I am not a citizen of the United States of America, as a participant within the internet community, I am bound by my interests, my ideals, and my values to stand for them when the world interacts with them, or opposes them. What the FCC does, or does not do, in the days and years to come, will impact how I continue to engage with the online community. Accordingly, I strongly urge the FCC to negate the attempts of individuals and corporations to unfairly and unreasonably limit access to the world wide web.

The internet is a multidirectional communications platform. It is where I communicate with my family and friends around the nation, around the world. It is where I as a writer share my work with readers, and it is where they give me feedback. It is where I have met fellow writers. It is where I have met so many people with so many ideas and we have shared them and made new things. It is where creators share their videos AND THEIR AUDIENCE SPEAKS DIRECTLY TO THEM IN RESPONSE. It is not a one way platform. It is where people meet friends, colleagues, even their spouses. You cannot meet your future spouse on TV, because you cannot meet people on TV. You can meet them on the internet, because it is a telecommunications service, and it is a public space. You are not allowed to limit speech in public spaces. —, Chatsworth, CA

Having Net Neutrality is something that is so important to the online community. I know that these are businesses, and the entire point of a business is to make money, but this is not the way to do it. There are so many people that barely make money doing what they love because they sell there art/crafts/photography/etc online and that's the only venue that they can afford. If Net Neutrality is dead then their venue is dead. That's many people that can now either NOT afford to pay their bills/insurance/rent/buy food/whatever else they need to and that's NOT good for business. Whoever thought this up is obviously not looking at the majority of internet users. For others, the internet is the only safe haven that they have and if they can't access the places that want/need to go because they can't afford it, that's a major blow to welfare of those people. I understand that business NEED to make money, but this is not the way to do it. Correct the mistake and restore Net Neutrality. Let businesses know that they can (and most definitely SHOULD) actually care about the people that they make their money from.

—Piper Jarvinen, ,

I say this with a bit of annoyance that this is even an issue. Net Neutrality is essential in a forward thinking society. My question is this, let's say we pulled a similar model with a phone service, an provider decides to throttle or altogether cut off a phone call. Now, myself I would be pretty upset and most likely leave that provider to find one that doesn't treat my personal matters with privacy and disrupts my communications. Case and point, if my provider deems it worthwhile to throttle my Netflix connection or perhaps even Skype. The same thing happens. Killing net neutality, effectively kills any start-up businesses to compete with the giants (Verizon, Comcast etc) which would, most definitely create a monopoly. I don't see this being changed however because in our society, it seems that corporations have power over the person. However, enough people take action and I'm not talking about these "petitions" on the internet, now controlled by the FCC & regulated by the ISP's (who effectively work for the FCC). But with proper action. That is what I fear will happen if Net Neutrality is not restored. Maybe not now, but in due time. Which is a shame.
—Justin Beaucage, Buckley, WA

We are in an age of the perpetual connection. By segregating lanes of the internet and selling faster lanes off to the highest bidder, you effectively turn the internet into online cable. Surely you don't expect this online society to lie down and accept that blindly

By restoring net neutrality, you help create privacy between the internet user & the internet company, help businesses (especially small businesses) continue working and having money to put food on the table, have a decent shelter to live, etc. Restoring Net Neutrality allows POC to let their voices and opinions be heard loud and clear! It's difficult when the mainstream media is portraying POC (asians, blacks, native-americans, hispanics, south east asians) in a stereotype that's either negative, unrealistic, or both. By stopping the FCC with these rules, the lack of diversity will only, and unfortunately, increase.

The internet should be there for access by everyone not only for the people who are able to make enough money to have to pay more than they already do for it. Many people's livelihoods depend on the internet and this would be taking that away! I'd also like to remind you that the world wide web was invented in the United Kingdom by Tim Berners-Lee. He was honoured as the "Inventor of the World Wide Web" during the 2012 Summer Olympics opening ceremony, in which he appeared in person, working with a vintage NeXT Computer at the London Olympic Stadium. America is based on equality and a chance for all to make their own space through hard work and perseverance. If people allow those with money and power over companies control things like the Internet, you remove that equal footing and replace it with a system that forces those who have good ideas and promising projects to back off and those with money to move forward. This sort of act limits not only the average citizen, both within and potentially outside of the USA, but also the possibility for those whose future lies in research the chance to gain invaluable knowledge. This will likely pull the USA and those closely linked to it further behind other countries in terms of technology, as communication and the observation of vital research papers via the internet may be slowed down enough to create a large impact. This is just one aspect of the impact of unfettered ISPs. The livelihoods of many people are also at risk, a fundamental part of why the USA was founded if I am correct.

Perhaps even their only source.
—Keely Fetter, Mesa, AZ

You need to fix this. Net neutrality is NECESSARY
—Patrick James Dominic scanlon, Anchorage, AK

I saw this post on a social media site, and I am thoroughly unimpressed. I don't pay for my own Internet yet, but in a few years I will, and I don't want to pay more than necessary just to access it. I have a right to communicating with others without limitations and restrictions, and this gets in the way. It isn't fair to anybody but the companies like Verizon who will undoubtedly take action eventually. It keeps the lower class in the slow lane, surprise, and rewards people with enough money to throw it down the toilet. This could destroy small businesses trying to get their name out via websites and social media. Not to mention having ads for others on their website if they even manage to get one. I can tell from my experience that seeing pop-up ads on YouTube has not helped the advertiser. In fact, it makes me resent them a bit for interrupting my video. This needs to be shut down before it's even started, because the younger generation has some things to say, and soon we won't be putting up with ridiculous shit like this anymore.

I'm on welfare so I have to keep my bills to just the essentials. Charging me extra for access to vital (for me) websites is going to severely impact my well-being and mental health (because I will be utterly reliant on carers and unable to reach friends or support forums). In addition, people's livelihoods are at stake here. This threatens artists and artisans, small businesses, students relying on the internet for 60-80% of their research, and individuals like myself who NEED the support and resources that only the internet can provide. Why does this fight keep coming up? Every year there is some new regulation that is infringing on our freedom with the internet and the legislators have their heads too far into a golden pot to hear the people screaming we don't want this. For those who went into politics and support this, I know if someone asked you, "Why did you become a politician?" You might reply with "To help the country/people/freedom." And I want you to take your head out of your ass. No. Not anymore. You did it to help wallets. PLEASE STOP THIS —Jennifer Ternullo, Pacific Grove, CA

Free and open internet has become a major part of our culture, both in our personal domestic space and also in how we conduct business. The notion that ISPs will be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is unconscionable.
—Elizabeth McCord, ,

Even the idea of doing this is completely insane. You'd certainly be limiting my rights as an American citizen, which goes against everything this country stands for. Absolutely sickening.
—Jessica Apalategui, Chino, CA

I swear to god
—Amelia Farnam, Jackson, MI

You can't be allowed to destroy the internet. It's the only form of media that we have left that isn't monopolized and polluted by a single, all controlling agency. This is not okay.
—Tess Brading, ,

It's ridiculous that this has come to this. It shouldn't have to.
—Amanda Filipsson, ,

Stop it.
—Martijn den van Bosch, ,

The internet should be free for all, it's that simple. If it were anything else, it would be the death of us.
—Anthony Foruria, ,

I am just so DONE with this stupid ass country!!!!!!
—Adria Lightsey, San Antonio, TX

you won't win this one!
—Elena, ,

Please don't be greedy.
—Trinh, ,

Pseudo-monopolies shouldn't be able to lobby congress into creating policies that cripple society while benefiting those companies that lobbied congress.
—Harris Hartung, Pittsburgh, PA

Nope. Internet is already something you have to pay for monthly.
—Papp Flóra Kornélia, ,

Idk what this is but I like the internet to be free
—Nathan Pinney, Atlanta, GA

power to the people..not the companies that rob them.
—Gordie Holt, Atlanta, GA

Stop letting corporations dictate and bully their agenda.
—Scott Bennion, Salt Lake City, UT

Cable companies' monopolies over cable and internet has grown to strong. It spits in the face of a free market and is un-American. Please repeal this decision.
—Charles Joplin, Pascagoula, MS

It's really sickening that this world is slowly being taken over by those who have the most money.
—Elainie Butler, Florence, SC

Please restore Net Neutrality.
—Nicholas T Cornell, Tahlequah, OK

I'm really sickened by this decision. People as old as them do not understand the importance of the internet. This is going to cause so many problems if they don't restore Net Neutrality. Different set of people should've decided something so big.
—Sofia Mejias Archibald, Rio Rancho, NM

This is sickening. I cant begin to explain how many of my friends like around the world. If they start causing this, Not only will websites be effected, but it could easily spread to internet based games, like FeralHeart and free games as such. It'd ruin many lives.
—Allie, Sierra Vista, AZ

This is a totally classist move and creates an even bigger divide between the poor and wealthy. By limiting the poor's access to websites, you are limiting opportunity. Stop creating more opportunities for the wealthy and limiting poor people. It's hard enough for low-income people to afford the internet as it is.
—Audrey Lewis, Milwaukee, WI

Please restore net neutrality. For many people in this country the internet is the prime source for the news and information about the world. For teens and other school-aged people the internet is a tool for learning; students need the internet to be efficient so they can continue to use it as a learning device. Many cannot afford the fees to use internet sites if net neutrality is lost. Please do not take away people's access to information.
—Echo Cox, Albuquerque, NM

As Morgan quoted: "The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain."
—Floor Lommers, ,

Because censorship of general information must be illegal for true freedom
—Jack Daniels, ,

Restore Net Neutrality
—John Jankovec, Streamwood, IL

Please help us preserve open internet! It is SO important.
—Bethany Ivie, Little Rock, AR

Believe it or not, this will ruin the lives of many if it happens.

Pls don't
—Ashley Bacchus, Fords, NJ

Please restore net neutrality. Love, The First Amendment
—Skyler Courreges, Brooklyn, NY

This is simple and clear evidence that the government does not have our best interest in mind. They will continue to hurt the common American and take what they can until we are left helpless. I am simply disgusted that our own government would do this to us.

—Alicia burns, Paradise, CA

Please, stop this.
—Louisa Beal, Beals, ME

Really?
—Scarlet, Big Bear Lake, CA

I do not want to see some of my favorite websites go down because they are forced to pay money to get faster speeds. It's bad enough that the net neutrality is gone, please don't force other sites to slow down and eventually die out.
—Wesley Volcko, Decherd, TN

I attend an online school and without net neutrality I don't know if my net would be fast enough to attend live session classes or even send in my projects. If this happens in America it will happen elsewhere and that cannot be allowed to happen. Why can't people just leave the net alone?
—Anna, Green Bay, WI

How about no? Let's take action!
—Shirley Ramos, Falls Church, VA

What BS. Net neutrality is basic equality.
—, ,

I support Net Neutrality. Providing "better" services to the wealthy may seem like a good idea at first; it is after all a major component in American philosophy, however in the long term it will do more harm than help. It is a form of discrimination, a socially acceptable form, but it is still discrimination that will treat people unfairly. If the majority of the laws made by a minority of the people with the majority of the wealth affect the majority of people with the minority of wealth, there will be chaos. Rulings exactly like this one are what caused our forefathers to revolt against England in the first place.
—Jay P. Bloodworth, New Burnside, IL

I can't believe you guys are still trying.to pull this bullshit.
—Rita, Lincoln Park, MI

can they just stop this is the umpteenth time I've had to do this shit.

Restore Net Neutrality! I cannot believe you're even thinking about it! This is one of the last things we have; do you want to even take this from us? Tsk.
—Jordan J Tudisco, Goleta, CA

Internet Freedom is essential in a Free Country.
—Jeffrey Scott Van Meter, Burke, VA

This is the realm of people's voices. As a US citizen, I will be apalled if a nation that totes around "freedom of speech and information" begins policing this aspect of American culture. It's like charging $5 to rent books from the library. Absolutely ridiculous.
—Kimberly Nutter, Zelienople, PA

Restore net neutrality!
—Gabrielle Gaydos, Memphis, TN

Why you do this? No do this. Everyone should be treated equally and not based on their social status. Discrimination levels= high.
—Kat O., ,

You will ruining the livelihood of many people who make their living on the internet, which isn't going to help the economy at all.
—Morgan Smith, Mabank, TX

Nope. Not happening.
—Kathryn Roberts, ,

This could spell disaster for small businesses and non-profits, who can't always predict what their internet needs will be on a day to day basis and don't have the flexibility in their budgets to buy the most premium packages of key services.
—Cat Carson, Belmont, MA

Restore net neutrality!
—Anna Hoover, Denver, CO

Lets stop these Internet Robber Barons.
—Bryan Mischke, Saint Paul Park, MN

As a university student, my entire education is centered around the ability to freely access internet. Assignments are completed, submitted, and graded online; some classes themselves are online, some tests, some textbooks--and several students would not be able to complete their education if this were not the case. Most of these educational aspects depend on students and teachers being able to freely access internet with proper speeds--because if the connection fails or takes too long, most programs don't allow second submissions of anything, or second chances on online tests. Net neutrality isn't only vital for undergrads, but think of anyone participating in any kind of research. Can you imagine the rates they would be charged double checking their findings or emailing participants for volumes of scholarly journals? As if academia doesn't cost enough already! There is no reason to allow big businesses to profit more from the internet. This society has quickly become dependent on Net Neutrality, and to strip that from us and make us pay isn't clever capitalism; it's greed, and it's taking advantage of a need that is already being fulfilled.
—Mary Myers, Oxford, MS

This is one more example of the people being exploited by big business. This kind of thing should NOT be allowed to happen, especially with technology that benefits the planet. Greed will never have enough, but We, the People, certainly have.
—Mike Moses, Columbus, OH

Maintaining Net Neutrality is vital to our freedom of expression. The fact that ISPs want to control access to the largest available communication service is despicable, as is the decision to allow ISPs to control the availability of this communication service. Giving the reigns of expression more readily only to those who can afford it, leaving those who cannot without this resource is a direct violation of the rights of the less fortunate. It is my hope that you take this into consideration and make the right decision to maintain Net Neutrality. Support your citizens and correct this disservice. Support equality. Support Net Neutrality.
—Katharine Veon, Saint Leonard, MD

Please, at least let us keep some of our sovereignty from big business.
—Christian Valdez, Sylmar, CA

You are killing free speech and powerful education tools by killing neutrality.
—Santino Castaneda, Tucson, AZ

To hell with having to pay extra for internet, cable companies are already charging $100+ JUST for a basic connection, NOT including the router they try to swindle you in to RENTING for $20+ a month.
—Daniel Gruber, Cumming, GA

The internet is wonderful, and useful, and frankly, these big corporations seeking to prioritize specific websites does apeal to those whom have achieved what they want but to those of us strugling and using things like khan academy and so many of these FREE resources need the internet to stay as is, when you make minimum wage in a house of eight things get tough and the one thing we rely on is how unbiased the world wide web can be. We need this to see behind the curtain and ask questions that are otherwise left un-answered at the hands of those with power to close the mouths and withhold the truth, so please keep the internet a free, wonderful, and useful resource for everyone to use.
—Isaiah Storonskij, Lincoln, NE

Seriously...why does big companies have to ruin everything? Can they just leave this one thing alone? The internet is not important to just us, it's important to everyone.
—Larissa, El Monte, CA

If you ever cared about Americans, not just the lobbyists, do not deprive us of what the rest of the world has deemed a basic human right. Restore Net Neutrality.
—Erin Asplund, Brooklyn, NY

So freedom of speech and freedom of expression are being outlawed too? Thanks, FCC.Now I don't have to think for myself!
—Meghan Center, Colorado Springs, CO

Why would you ever deny the Internet what it was founded on? It was made to be a wealth of information, and now? It's a source of income for the rich to become richer, and we are no better than those countries that filter the Internet entirely, I.e. Communist China and North Korea. Fantastic job, D.C. You win this one.
—Matthew Thomas, Painesville, OH

A government for the people, NOT the corporations!!
—Ligia Borges, Orlando, FL

this is the dumbest fucking thing ive ever had to sign for like are you joking? why the fuck do you think killing net neutrality will be A Positive Thing
—Rebecca, College Park, MD

I am Not tired of seeing these petitions. I am tired of seeing petitions get hundreds of thousands, and even MILLIONS of signatures, only for the people receiving the petition, simply going "Pffff, we don't give a shit about what people think or want"

—Daniel den Van Bussche, ,

Please restore net neutrality! This is so important. The internet shouldn't be like your average cable show where we have to pay for our freedoms. Reverse your decision!
—Carolyn Rogers, Ferrum, VA

This is obviously not what the people want. Do the right thing.
—M Matos, Charles Town, WV

This is an issue important for all human rights. It's absolutely unforgivable to big corporate entities the ability to control who sees what. Make it right, start treating broadband like a communications service.

The internet does not need to be like cable these out of touch people need to start thinking of the people not the companies lining their pockets with cash.
—Rebecca Wright, Marlow, OK

I want internet service providers classified as common carriers
—Kamron, Chicago, IL

What else will they slap a price tag on? Enough is enough.
—Laura G, Mechanicsburg, PA

I bet my life that someone who is over the age of 40 came up with this DUMB idea. You can't do this just because television is losing popularity. NOBODY, i mean NOBODY will even get on the internet if this happened. The whole point the internet is popular is because basically anyone can access it. If you take the out the equation what do you think will happen? Hmm? STUPID ASS NIGGA.
—Yunique Whitfield, Taneytown, MD

Please restore net neutrality.
—Jenny, Buena Park, CA

You guys need to stop this.
—Rob, Stone Mountain, GA

Take away net neutrality, you take away freedom.
—Estacia Thompson, Salt Lake City, UT

This is the standard oil of our age, please do not undo the struggles of those that came before us. Allowing the level of content control that a non-neutral internet would allow is akin to allowing the electric company to select which brand of electronic devices your outlet would power. The internet is the newest utility in our ever changing world. It has, in the past decade gone from a luxury to a necessity, required to ensure any movement in our society. We have placed with you; as a regulatory agency, a sacred trust. It is time for you to show that such trust was not misplaced.
—Richard Friend, Essex, MD

Bring back Net Nutrality
—Roger Jeffries, Henderson, NV

This has got to stop! When did you stop caring about the equal rights of the people!
—Rick, Indian Springs, NV

The internet should be open to all users. Let people decide what to block, not the companies. Offer software to assist with this issue, not the companies.

There is no reason for this to be taken down. Most of the people in the country are poor these days.
—Alyssa Marie, Bloomington, IN

Don't kill the internet.
—Simon Wolfe, Newton, MA

As a hard-working and voting citizen, I make a fair amount of money as an illustrator and artist over the internet. Without an entirely free internet - a service used by myself and many others - you risk jeopardizing thousands of jobs and damaging a utility used by tens of thousands of people. What makes the internet a useful utility at all is precisely its equal speed for all information.
—Victoria Elliott, Austin, TX

Unbelievable. Treat broadband like a communications service. If anything, with the power and influence the internet has it should be public domain.
—Noah Crowley, Clermont, FL

Net Neutrality !!! Net Neutrality !!!!! Net Neutrality !!!!!!
—Maggie McGuiggan, Earlysville, VA

This is unacceptable. The internet is a bastion of creativity and collaboration. Shame on the appeals court.
—Sarah Jones, Pittsburg, CA

I am more concerned about what Anonymous will do when they decide to act. You think receiving a bunch of petitions is ruining your day? Wait until they explode. We may be pissed, but they will act in more creative ways.
—Nicholas Kilano, Knoxville, TN

—Miranda Morrill, New Hartford, CT

This was an idiotic idea and is completely unfair to people who can't afford to pay out of pocket for information. Information should be free and accessible to everyone.

Net neutrality is vital to the well-being of the internet.
—David Fleischli, Mission Viejo, CA

The internet is nessicary!!
—Amy yoder, Buffalo, NY

The internet is NOT the same as TV, I don't see any advantages to shutting off whole sections of the internet from people who can't pay enough. The internet is more than entertainment, not having net neutrality is like making people pay to access certain books at the library.
—Ruth Redmond, ,

The idea's that you have come up with are pure ludicrous. Realize that the people you are doing this too are yourselves as well. You'll slow down whatever it is you do on a day to day basis, not to mention that impact that will be felt everywhere. Shops, Business, Hospitals all jeopardizing themselves because they don't have the fast lanes to the items they need.
—Matt Keyz, Sinton, TX

how can you be so greedy, FCC?
—Grahame Vines, Nashville, TN

Do you even care about what is good for America?
—Laura, Denver, CO

You can't take away out neutrality. The internet as it is has changed the way we look and interact with the world. If you change it or take it away then we will no longer be advancing. We will be devolving. Please don't change the way we interact.
—Gerald Dobbins, Champaign, IL

Open, neutral internet access saved my life over and over as a teen, in ways I suspect are hard to imagine for people who haven't had that experience. This is vital.
—Alex Brett, ,

This is rediculous. No one should even have the opportunity to control our internet access like this. Fix it now!
—Amanda, Salem, UT

This is serious. There is no reason for the ISP to filter the internet "for" us, or for their own interests. Net Neutrality needs to stay, or else we're heading to some very bad times in the United States. Our Internet system already seems like a joke compared to some other nations, let's not have this become another point of mockery. Or worse, have our own internet policies affecting others outside of the country. The lawsuits that would result are ridiculous. Make the right choice, keep the net free.
—Jared S Allen, Moreno Valley, CA

Capitalism will be the death of a healthy economy
—Mason, Heath, OH

I use the internet not only for enjoyment, education but also I make my money from sites like etsy and Instagram. If you take that away from me it's taking away half of my income that I use just to support myself! thats my grocery money and gas money when my job only covers my bills, you take away the internet and I'll be left a starving artist as I know many many more like myself will be. Please reconsider this for not only my sake but for millions of others just like me. Maybe I would be able to afford certain sites still but maybe my customers won't be able to thus ultimately ruining my business of selling my handmade jewelry.
—Kayla Ross, Reno, NV

Net Neutrality is exactly the sort of thing this country was based on. Please do not let the Haves keep a basic right from the Have Nots.
—Elizabeth, Hudson, MA

Yeah, I know you don't give a flying fuck what actual citizens want because we don't have enough money to take you out to dinner at a 5 star, or ride you around some sunday on a yacht but the citizens of the US and WORLD would like net neutrality restored and kept.

Reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service. Please stop stealing my money!!!
—Bonnie Gibbon, Virginia Beach, VA

Literally? What the actual fuck? Stop destroying everything thats good in the world.
—Alexandra Glathar, Geneseo, NY

I have college and work to do. That takes up about 14 hours of my day. That being said, I would appreciate being able to complete my homework quickly so that I can do other human tasks (I.e. sleep, eat, bathe, exercise.) I dont usually sign these petitions, but assuming this is true, it has the potential to do a lot of bad things. And I dont want life to get harder.
—Jennifer, Cameron, MO

We don't need yet another tool to give the greedy even more money while bullying out every small or independent business
—Anthony De Van, Miami, FL

The internet is the only free medium left. The world needs net neutrality for countless reasons, if you would stop to consider them they outweigh any profit you could attain from capitalizing internet access.
—Christian Zemanek, Arlington, TX

Don't ruin the internet. Seriously
—David Forss, ,

As a college student and researcher, I need net neutrality. I already pay tons of money to go to school, and to start paying to access the web content that I need is just ridiculous.

The internet is the most powerful, and effective means of global communication we have today. Limiting that is taking a step backwards in progressive history. Please represent us, the people who elected the governing officials, in this time. Together we can make our world an environment of learning and equality for all, regardless of their financial situation. To reject internet neutrality it to step back into the dark ages of the feudal system.
—Matthew Cathcart, Lebanon, PA

Why on earth would you take away net neutrality? The internet is a way of communication and news and fun, and the american people deserve uncensored, unfettered access with our peers across the country.
—Emma Pringle, Redding, CA

The people should govern this country, not special interests.
—Kenneth Sweet, Rushville, IN

Start treating broadband like a communications service, and to restore its Net Neutrality rules.
—Kaycee Hammond, Mount Summit, IN

This decision could mean a huge blow to the current economy as quite a lot of shopping is done online nowadays. Not to mention this means the possible death of every small business out there including the one I work for. Most clients who come to my place of employment discover us online. This country is supposed to be a land of opportunity and one by one those opportunities are being struck down. I know a LOT of people that supplement their meager incomes with online projects or start small businesses and advertise with websites. If net neutrality remains dead, I hate to think of where every artist, craftsperson or small business of any kind will be financially. I work with six wonderful people. Please do not stand by and allow us to go out of business from the careers we have studied to obtain. Please to not stand by and watch that last nail be driven into our already suffering economy.
—Megan Hogan, Columbia, PA

I don't even mind if these companies want to sell higher access speeds to companies that can afford it like Facebook, Netflix, etc, but not if it means they can slow down anything they want in the meantime. The American pay these telecommunications companies a LOT of money to have Internet access, and to have them dictate what we watch at what speed smells a little Orwellian. Its not about making a better product as they claim. It's about control and price gouging. And all the whining they do about making more money? I'm not buying it as long as I see commercials on EVERY channel, every ten minutes for AT&T, Verizon, and all the others. Quite frankly, if they can afford all that advertising, we (the consumer) are already getting the raw end of the deal. Don't let them take even more from your constituents. Thanks for your time, ~nicholaswagner
—Nicholas Wagner, Jacksonville, FL

ISPs already get away with too much. They're getting too much power and getting too greedy. They're going to end up killing one of mankind's greatest achievements with their greed. The internet is not being handled properly and it could eventually cause the internet to change for the worst.
—Trevor Weaver, Dallas, TX

This is very important to the general public, your sites have crashed TWICE and people have delivered comments BY HAND! Did you even see the giant internet wide protest yesterday? You can't ignore us, you can't do this. Restore net neutrality.

The internet is how we connect with people like-minded, when it feels like there's no one around. I know it saved my life more than once and for countless other people. This would be cruel.
—Anna, Irons, MI

Broadband internet access should be classified as any other telecommunications service. The FCC should not allow companies to sell the best internet speeds to the highest bidder. Access to digital resources should be right for everyone.
—Kristin Williamson, Oklahoma City, OK

Net Neutrality is the one of the only things left that gives most of us a sense of freedom we haven't grown to know in the United States which is supposed to be the "home of the free". Right. Because money obviously solves all of the worlds problems. But in our current age we only worry about making a profit without a care for the consequences, who we may hurt in the process. No. You just step on the little guys. Great job America. Really. It's so good to see some good old fashioned monopolized freedom.
—Adrian Rios, Mesa, AZ

Net Neutrality is important! We can't let the internet become another place where only the big corporations can do anything. We can't let it become like cable TV where you have to select certain packages, the internet needs to stay neutral, that is what has made it what it is today.
—Lisa Mason, ,

Net Neutrality is vital to my business (a small IT development company) and to the entire spirit of tech innovation
—Brittany Skinner, Brooklyn, NY

It is very important that this does not happen, I am a freelance artist and I rely heavily on the free internet for my businesses! I am already strapped for cash as it is, I don't want to have to decide in the future if i should buy groceries or renew my internet subscription. That's just insane.
—Lexie Takis, Plymouth, MI

Why do people feel the need to interfere with the beautiful thing that is the internet? This benefits no one but corporations.
—Evan Andrew Richard, Saint Louis, MO

RIOT, RIOT NOW
—Branden W, Highland, OH

Please, everyone, think about it. Net Neutrality is the only thing keeping thousands upon thousands of businesses above water. The Google ad, or the top of page search result that gets two people to their store to spend the last $150 they needed to pay the rent for the store. That would go to places like Wal-Mart and Target. I love those places, but a world with no small business is a world welcoming monopoly. Keep net neutrality!
—Nick Clark, Edgerton, KS

UNDERSTAND THAT YOUR ACTIONS AFFECT NOT JUST ENTERTAINMENT WEBSITES LIKE NETFLIX AND TUMBLR BUT ALSO THOSE WEBSITES USED BY STUDENTS WHO ABSOLUTELY NEED THEM FOR CLASSES. THIS IS AN OUTRAGE. HAVE A SOUL. STOP WITH THE MONEY HUNGRY BULLSHIT THAT HAS BECOME AMERICA'S GOVERNMENT AND ACTUALLY LOOK OUT FOR THE PEOPLE YOU ARE SUPPOSED TO BE LOOKING OUT FOR. AS A VERIZON EMPLOYEE, I CAN TELL YOU THAT THESE CORPORATIONS HAVE NO NEED FOR THE MONEY OR THE MONOPOLIZING POWER OF INTERNET FAST LANES. STOP. STOP. STOP. TURN THIS AROUND. DO THE RIGHT THING FOR ONCE.
—Kellen Wittrien, Branchville, NJ

As a Phd. student, this would b detrimental. I highly doubt the interne companies would allow easy access to all the sites I need for my research. In addition, if schools want better internet for their students, who do you think will have to pay for such a thing? Correct, the students. As if we do not already pay exorbitant fees and tuition. This is just another issue that will pile on the student loan debt, suppress our creativity, and allow the cable companies anothe means to monopolize the internet. It's sick when other countries have realized that an invention like the internet should be a basic human right so everyone has equal access to information, but here we just want to think of way that everyone can make more money. Why can we not challenge ourselves to, for once, do something in the best interest of all the people in our nation?
—Seth Kirby, Johnson City, TN

They know what we are going to say. I have no faith that they will listen. Still, one extra number might help Restore Net Neutrality. Now.

—Rock, Wilsonville, OR

So I woke up this morning and for some reason my internet wasn't working. I couldn't get anywhere, not even to my email. My first thought was somehow the internet PTB (powers that be) had already found a way to slow things down so much that I no longer had access to anything. Which pretty much made me panic. See, my mom needs the internet to send her hours in to her office. Her internet is spotty sometimes anyway, and her yahoo email is temperamental. In fact she was recently reprimanded for not getting her hours in on time. See, if she doesn't get the hours sent in that she worked during the day to the office she doesn't get paid. If she doesn't get paid, she can't pay bills. If she can't pay bills we are pretty much screwed. And don't say, 'just call them in' because let me tell you something, our cell phones suck. Some days we barely have enough signal out here to send a freaking text message. Or, sometimes it takes days for a text message to get through to us, actual phone calls are worse. I kid you not. My phone will sometimes show missed calls, and when I call said person they inform me they haven't tried to call me in like a week. So please, don't let net neutrality end. We're barely making it as it is, and if my mom can't get her hours in we're screwed.
—Jyme Kessinger, Morgantown, KY

We are all struggling with money anyway and now you want more companies to struggle? Broke students to struggle? The internet is running fine the way it is, we do not need to keep trying to put restraints —Alicia, Livermore, CA

The buck stops here. If we let this go, the future will only see less and less, and only what they want us to see. Do the right thing.
—Eric Pizzeck, San Marcos, TX

Don't be a walnut.
—Victoria Heyn, Burbank, CA

I will not stand for this.
—Anthony Beckner, Hicksville, NY

Net neutrality is a human right
—Ryan Ku, Maple Valley, WA

This is ridiculous. Why should we have to pay to use the internet??? Comcast is an awful company, they've been in the news a lot recently for awful customer service. WHY WOULD YOU GIVE THEM THIS POWER? This is an injustice. This has to be a restriction of our rights. Fix this.
—Larissa Gaines, Ringgold, GA

Jesus christ, stop being such greedy stupid narwhals. You already sit ona pile of money.
—Pihl Törnqvist, ,

Internet service providers need to be classified as common carriers! The internet and it's resources should be able to be accessed by all. If smaller businesses do not have equal access to reasonable internet speeds, then the whole idea of a free and open market starts to collapse. Small businesses (often called "the backbone of America") who rely heavily or entirely on the internet WILL be forced to fold. Over the past 20 years, our whole global system of commerce, as well as information, social media, and entertainment, has become centered around the internet. Don't remove the US from participating in these conversations. Let's try not to be that country.
—Catherine Matz, Canoga Park, CA

I'm getting really tired of this discussion coming up. The internet does not just belong to one group or company, it is a hub for expression and interaction and a boundless wealth of knowledge, forcing payment to receive news or to gather hard to find information for a book report is disgusting and the outcomes would be a decline in creativity and learning. Please do not let this happen.
—Alexander Denning, Tucson, AZ

Please, please do not abolish Net Neutrality. This is America. This is 2014. We do not discriminate when it comes to the Internet. Access to the Internet is becoming quite synonymous with a basic human right. Everyone uses the Internet to function; we use it to apply to colleges, to scholarships, to get jobs, for banking, for directions, for social media, for self-promotion, for art, for bettering ourselves, and for so many other things. I see this decision to remove Net Neutrality as the biggest threat to our freedom. There is no benefit for anyone except your typical big wigs who can gain a profit from this. This is America. We shouldn't have to subject ourselves to being controlled like this. We are not a dictatorship, or a communist government, or an authoritarian government, or an oligarchy. We are Americans. We are a representative democracy, and we have the right to choose who should represent our best interests. We have the right to remove that person if that person no longer serves our best interests. We have the right to take collective action to tell you that this is not okay. People are already barely scraping by, and doing this would send people into poverty. I myself would not be able to afford the Internet. I would not be able to communicate with my family, e-mail my friends from halfway across the country, figure out where the nearest Wal-Mart is, find scholarships to pay for college, look for jobs to pay for college, look for cheaper textbooks because college bookstores are a rip off, look for a graduate school to apply to, access graduate school applications, contact professors for recommendation letters, locate my missing mother, find where my father is buried, share my art, see how my friends are doing. I could keep going on about how this personally affects me but there is not enough time. Currently, I should be studying for an exam, but this is too important. I used the internet to access the lectures my professor put online. Does getting rid of Net Neutrality mean that I won't even be able to study for my exam in the future? Does that mean I won't be able to finish college? Does that mean I will end up with far worse than what my parents had because I do not have access to very basic and essential things to complete my college courses? I am abhorred that anyone would even think about doing this. Instead of gaining money from making people pay for the Internet, why don't we put it into other things like--oh I don't know--looking for an alternative to gas and oil, looking for a way to get more students to graduate from college, looking for ways to help Americans understand the health care system, looking for ways to increase literacy in American adults, looking for ways to fix our education system, looking for ways to promote healthy lifestyles, and just trying to find a way to make this short, short life on this tiny, speck of a planet actually enjoyable and mean something. Please don't do this. For me. For my little sister who uses the Internet to find audiobooks because she can't focus on reading. For my little brother who uses the Internet to watch sports videos to improve his own skills. For my aunt who uses the Internet to sell eggs for her mom. For my uncle who uses the Internet for his own business. For the Americans who just need it to get by. Please.
—Sierra Defoor, Walterboro, SC

This is taking away freedom. The United States is all about freedom, why would any American vote for this?
—Bridgette Keehl, new hudson, MI

No. Just no.
—Sofi Consonni, ,

this is facism
—Jeffery kelly, Chicago, IL

The amazing thing about the internet is the equal footing it places users on. This is just want major companies like Verizon need: more power. The idea that some people (read: the lower income population that makes up MOST of this country) would be forced to find a way to pay more for the same internet usage as the rest of the country is egregious. I make my living online, helping other to create online business. Many of these people have been forced to turn to the internet for their income because it is hard, or impossible, for them to find work elsewhere. This is something you should take into consideration before you decide there should be an internet for wealthy people and one for everyone else. Isn't there enough inequality in the world for you already?
—Amanda Moser, Austin, TX

Restore net neutrality! Don't let the government fuel the disgusting greed that plagues our nation and world. Broadband IS a communications service and it's net beaut reality rules must be restored.
—Rebecca Garcia, Philadelphia, PA

This honestly sounds like it should be illegal. Or at least like it should have been a long time ago.
—Alyssa, Alexandria, VA

Net Neutrality is necessary for small businesses, capitalistic growth, and independent entrepreneurs. Don't crush the free market by making businesses pay exorbitant amounts to reach customers faster.
—Julie Huggins, Sanford, NC

Destroying the equality of the internet will not only squash new ideas and minds, but put the rich on top even more while leaving the rest of us out to dry, this is a failure and proof that this law is motivated solely by greedy selfish people. Disgusting!
—Safiya Al-Akoum, Gilbert, AZ

Shut this shit down! What're they even thinking, man.

Broadband should be a utility and all networks should be accessible, open and affordable
—Jonathan Burden, Oak Park, IL

I want internet service providers classified as common carriers.
—Maddi Horsley, Rapid City, SD

This decision was made not in the interest and good will of the citizens of the United States, but for their exploitation by a common resource at the hands of a corporation. If this law is upheld, it will send a message that the government of this country does not represent the best interest of the people.
—James M. Otworth, Hillsboro, OH

Net neutrality is not only important for education and the spreading of ideas, but it's also crucial to many small businesses and the wages of creative people. Killing net neutrality is killing JOBS. Why would you do that in this economy? So a greedy few percent don't have to shave a couple thousand off of the millions they already have? Come on. Start caring about the American people instead of the social elite for once.
—Kelsey, Watertown, WI

Keep the net free!

—Maxaly Pierre-Louis, ,

sad, but one day none of this will matter.
—Tony Saborio, Brooklyn, NY

This verdict is unfair to everyday people who use the internet for business or personal use. Our economy is still on the long road to recovery and not everyone will be able to afford to pay for proper internet usage. This will in turn affect colleges, their students and faculty, as well as independently and family owned business. The ruling needs to be reversed and proper actions need to be taken to fix the system.
—Marisa Ortiz, Toms River, NJ

The internet has always been available, even for those who don't have much. People could always go to the library to use their computers if they didn't have their own. This will not only widen the gap between the "have"s and the "have not"s but it will allow cable companies a monopoly.
—Carolyn Angi, Mount Kisco, NY

As a freelance artist and writer, the Internet is the ONLY source of income for my family and me. Restoring Net Neutrality allows me to support my family! Please Please Please restore it!
—Sarah Helen More, Bend, OR

It is absolutely ridiculous for companies to try and control what sites Internet users may access unless they pay a fee. The internet should be a free service for people to use for information, social media, and business without companies trying to control that. We already have far too much advertising on things like YouTube. Companies like Verizon should not have the power to control the Internet.
—, Tucker, GA

The fact this is even being brought up is disgusting. The internet should not be owned by any one person, company, or business. Its the only place that is still FREE to the world. Do not corrupt our Internet and threaten our livelihoods. If this fails, You may have Riots on your hands. and if Anonymous can show you what people on the internet are capable of... you should be weary with messing with people ALL OVER THE WORLD.
—Courtney Lynn, Manchester, NH

Please, stop the individuals and corporations trying to restrict the flow of information and public discourse.
—Nathan Cornell, Saint Louis, MO

My spouse and I serve this nation's freedom in the United States Marine Corps and are appalled to see our freedoms being stolen from us by our own politicians and representatives. The future relies on a fair and free internet infrastructure for communication. This issue is extremely important to me and will largely determine who I vote for and support monetarily and personally. We are owed the freedom we have served. Keep the internet equal.
—Katie Morrison, Jacksonville, NC

Boo you!
—Jay Thackery, ,

Keep in mind that, with the economy already in the dumps and STILL not showing recovery for the people, putting up financial barriers to the internet will only cause more pain for the people of the United States. These are your registered voters, and they will be pissed if their access to a fundamental part of our society is restricted.
—Jonathan Parrott, Salt Lake City, UT

Restore net neutrality!
—Ange Nadje, Columbia, MD

—Sam, ,

By ignoring the people on the need to keep Net Neutrality, you obvious have lost all moral fiber and have lost the interest in the people. Is corruption all you now?
—Tasha Newton, Sedalia, CO

Nobody should pay for their freedom!
—Lulí W., ,

My roommates and I already pay $76.00 for slow internet through time warner cable because they have a monopoly. Please don't pass this law. You will be killing small businesses because they will need to make the choice of hiring more employees or expanding or for paying for the "fast lane". There is no need for this.
—Jessie Raines, Saint Paul, MN

We need net neutrality!!!!
—Louise, ,

We shouldn't have a limit of our media, which attaching a cost and control most definitely would. America, home of the free, needs this freedom of information. Isn't that what we live for every day?
—Alaina Gillett, Vina, CA

It is abhorrent that such a thing is occuring and really shows how far in corporate pockets this country is —Jacob, North Tonawanda, NY

Please keep the Internet available and free. We live in America, land of the free where we have rights.
—Naureen, Katy, TX

Fuck that paying for internet shit
—Rhett Richard, Denham Springs, LA

Don't let them ruin the internet. We can't trust these companies to manage themselves they will exploit everything they can't to make money.
—Andrew Goodman, Clementon, NJ

Net Neutrality is a vital balance on the web, and it's horrifying that such powerful officials would throw care and public opinion to the wind so hastily. The thoroughly disappointed American public speaks back.
—Zachary, Murrieta, CA

Pieces of shit.
—Xenia Nava, Eugene, OR

Seriously though, as a college student who LIVES on free internet, I can tell you that I cannot afford paying for certain websites here and there while trying to get an education. Please, reconsider this ruling, help a student out!
—Sena Dawes, Seattle, WA

When will people stop trying to control the interent? All it does is impead progress and put larger emphasis and strain between people who can and cannor afford an innovation that is supposed to be available to everyone.
—Robert Beamer, Monument, CO

Net neutrality limits the ability to share and spread information among the general public
—Leia Allen, Seattle, WA

The internet was the last place of freedom and equality on earth and if we keep the net neutral it wont hurt anybody. By ending the neutrality you have hurt the american people.
—Tyler Markowski, Fairport, NY

This is an injustice.
—Tim Alex, Suisun City, CA

The internet allows anyone, anywhere, to gain or give access to unlimited information and resources, which can sometimes be life-changing and life-saving. Allowing corporations to use the internet itself for profit, and limit or deny the public's access to those things at their whim and convenience, would be a corruption that could only lead to more corruption. The "rights" of corporations should never be held in higher esteem than the rights of individual people.
—Sophia McKissick, Syracuse, NY

Net neutrality is good for everyone, and important for the free flow of ideas and access to information. Please keep the net neutral. Thanks!

I still believe that the wants and needs of those who use the services should be put before the wants of those who want to regulate them without consideration for its users. The internet is a communications service and practically every company, every business uses it to an extent to communicate with each other and its customers. Everyone should have equal access to it; it should be fair with no gate keepers - especially gatekeepers who have a vested monetary interest in who gets access.

—Daniel Ortega, Los Angeles, CA

This seems illegal. It doesn't make any sense.
—, Greenwell Springs, LA

I think it's ridiculous that the government is worrying about something as insignificant as this when there are so many larger issues at hand. I.e Ferguson, global climate change, the giant clusterfuck that is the Middle East, LGBTQ and women's rights. These things matter. People matter. Making the internet cost more money is only going to hurt us as a civilization. The internet is the one thing where people are free to do as they please, and quite honestly is the one piece of technology that has furthered our country to where it is now. It has increased art, writing, and everyone is more educated because of it. To get rid of that would be a great dishonor to the people of this country, and the world in general. I urge you to reconsider.

The people have spoken loud and clear and now it's time for the FCC to listen. It is a breach of our democracy to side with corporate interests when millions of people have voiced their opinion and concerns only to be ignored.
—Karen Echols, Brooklyn, NY

There is no reason to succumb to these bogus companies, especially not when you don't need the money.
—Robert Weldon, West Sayville, NY

To take away net neutrality is a gross breach of moral conduct. The Internet is a public forum, and to show preference to large companies is detrimental small businesses, freelance artists, and the everyday Internet user.

—Paige Perrottet, Berlin, NJ

The internet is one of the few free things we have left. Its indescriminate and huge and uncensored. Its the thoughts and behaviors of the world. Don't be a dickhead. Don't stop that.
—Lael, Houston, TX

Good morning / afternoon / evening , All of us we would like to return to our standards rather than be forced by them since we are already paying the bills for a company who we are subbed to earn internet , phone and TV cable, there's no point to pay extra for those things since it's our freedom to browse wherever we want. It's bloody outrageous as scandalous, let's brig them down how we did with SOPA / PIPA some time ago or if we think a bit about what's really happening is a trifle if you ask me.
—Boby Iulian, ,

Comcast a shit
—Nick Allen, ,

The internet has always been a place of freedom where people can express themselves. What you're doing here is taking away that freedom and turning it into a moneymaker. There are many businesses online, as well as freelance artists and designers trying to make as much as they can through a global audience on the internet. I don't want to see my favourite artists having to choose between groceries or purchasing a new tier package in order to access websites such as tumblr or DeviantArt, when it's not even guaranteed that their audience will see their work because of the new pay-to-access thing. Please reconsider what you are doing because if you end up going ahead with your decision, the internet will be dead before we know it.
—Emily, ,

This is an affront to consumer rights and has to be stopped.
—Johnathan Stare, San Diego, CA

This isn't good for anyone except internet providers. Just another opportunity for poor Americans to be beat down by the wealthy.

I do not want this to affect the way I use the internet. Inevitably, it will.
—Amanda schroeder, Los Angeles, CA

We need the net to be free.
—Joseph Giordano, Schenectady, NY

The Internet has become such an integral part of our lives, and I believe putting monetary controls and limits on it will seriously damage and affect our way of communication. Is it really necessary at all? Many other countries allow Internet as it is, and it would be ridiculous for our country to be the first to purposefully limit and hinder its citizens.

The Internet is a place where many individuals feel free. Take away the freedom and many people would take action.
—Andrew Rosas, Corona, NY

I refuse to pay for sites I won't even use.
—Luis Umana, Miami, FL

The Internet is service, in modern times, that must be protected and preserved for all to access, in any merit. Comcast, Verizon, and their ilk would rather rake in profit than upgrade their infrastructure (now approaching some twenty years old) to modern standards, yet charge customers premium prices to access their services. And that's just terrible.
—Mr. Marcus Barton, Middletown, NY

omfg leave the internet alone already seriously. why not focus on more important things rather than destroying our fucking /lives/ jfc.
—Jj, ,

Today my internet slowed to a crawl on some of my most frequented websites. I found myself frustrated, unable to do some of my schoolwork, and eventually just gave up on it. That's what'll happen if Net Neutrality is actually dead. You really think people will pay extra to go on websites they enjoy? People will just stop using the internet altogether. They'll find something else to do. They'll find something new to get angry at, and that's a fate I don't want to see for our country. I personally will not pay to go to websites that exist for free on top of all of the other payments I have to make already. If you think we live in an economy where that's viable for the common man, you haven't taken a look out the window of your office in a long time.
—Zachary Guerbe, Colorado Springs, CO

I want internet service providers classified as common carriers.
—Rachel, Indianapolis, IN

The internet was invented so that ideas, information, and resources could be easily and freely shared among everyone. Allowing one provider, or any, to bastardize that vision in the name of their profit is a laugh. The internet is not full of their intellectual property, but that of all. Why don't the people who wrote the majority of the net's content get a say in who can see what, when, how fast, and for how much? And are we forgetting that schools and businesses in today's world actually require use of the internet? Will I be able to log onto my University account to check homework, class schedule, discussion, and content everywhere? I'm not paying extra for that, not with what tuition costs already.
—Eric Leinung, Brooklyn, NY

Net Neitrality is vital for the internet, a major utility used by millions in the United States and by billions across the globe. We, the people, like our Internet to be free of controls from anyone, let alone ISPs.

This would be the next step of privatizing freedom for the sake of those who don't need any more money than they already have.
—Andrea G, Greentown, OH

Do NOT allow this to happen to the only free thing that we now have. There is no more freedom in America, and are we destined to become mindless, controlled slaves at the sake of corporates? I don't. Please, for the sake of all of us, don't let it pass and keep the Net Neutrality!

—Alex McDougall, San Luis Obispo, CA

I implore you, please don't let the ISPs destroy Net Neutrality. My generation grew up with a free internet; if that's taken away I have no idea how we'll handle it. Judging by message boards and social media sites, not with grace and good judgement. The open internet is the only place left that human voices speak louder than money. By not labeling ISPs as telecommunication servicers, net neutrality is in jeopardy, and so is the public's ability to use the internet in a free and equal way. This is a violation of our right to free speech, because it gives those with more money easier access to the internet. So the internet as a telecommunication service. Restore net neutrality. Bring equality back to the internet.

This is bullshit!
—, Las Vegas, NV

as an artist and a full time student, i advertise my art online because i don't have to the time to go to galleries and sell at events, but its also impossible to pay for my customers to have high speed on any of my sites because i don't make enough money. taking away net neutrality is literally allowing comcast and there few other companies out there monopolise on the entire internet, which is a service for every human being to access everything there is to access EQUALLY I have the right to be able to watch a show on netflix, and visit a non-profit website without any difference in speed.
—Alia-Ross Elwy, Exeter, NH

This is some 1984 shit. America, home of the free if you have millions of dollars.
—Alexander Young, Lubbock, TX

Don't do this! It's important that the internet remain neutral and accessible
—Sara Hussain, Cary, NC

the FCC should stand up to the telecom giants it's meant to regulate and do its job--protect customers, not companies.
—Sean, Blauvelt, NY

This is honestly kind of disgusting... I'm not sure why people keep trying to strike down net neutrality. I'd rather not have my mother, who is suffering financially, to lie in more debt for fast internet. I'm not fond of this act and I never was. My mother uses the internet to schedule the days she works; slowing down the internet to any extent would be unfair because even then my mother could not make the money to PAY internet bills. Please think about this.
—N, Tomball, TX

A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential. The internet is an essential communication service thus should be freely available to all. STOP THE GREED.
—L Loun, Dallas, TX

To allow cable companies to charge different prices to consumers is blatant price discrimination and anti-consumer.
—Michael Dopuch, Mentor, OH

The internet supuld stay toll free. Especially think of student's and their use of the the web as an important learning tool. Tuition and books are already too expensive as it is —Joseph Angelino, East Meadow, NY

Think of artists (like myself) and other people who need the internet to get their name out there so they can hopefully make a living off of what they love to do. Big name internet providers are not the only people out there who need to make money, you know.
—Catherine Litvaitis, Wantagh, NY

Please, for god's sake stop screwing this up. This is one of the few things that still really matters.
—Christopher Gilson, Oakland, CA

STOP FUCKING WITH OUR INTERNET!
—Marco, Tucson, AZ

Net Neutrality is a necessity. These people are trying to ruin the internet entirely for their own selfish reasons.
—Connor M, Boerne, TX

Do you really have nothing else to do?Are you not satisfied with how much control you have already? You don't have to care about the people. You haven't been doing that for years. But, when we finally band together and take action.....don't try to come crawling back. You stay on your high horses. But, just know that those horses won't be able to hold all of the crap you're full of for long. You will figure out that the people are stronger than anything you've ever seen. Or controlled for that matter. This comment is for the FCC and anyone who thinks that they can push around what they think is the weak and defenseless.
—Jennifer Alexis Smith, Palatka, FL

College students are broke enough and the internet is a must have for any course so if this occurs a lot of people wont be able to go for higher education!!

ISP's break Antitrust monopoly laws.
—Vincent, Glendale, AZ

Come on Wheeler! Prove John Oliver wrong!
—Andrew, Brooklyn, NY

This in and of itself will have stark ramifications on the entire US economy. The first ISP the decides to treat all traffic equally is going to have a very sudden and vicious monopoly on the internet service industry.
—Cameron D Carpenter, Rohnert Park, CA

The internet has long been a place where people are free to express their opinions, show their true selves, and display their artwork. Don't take away the privileges we have here, and so often lack offline. Say yes to net neutrality!
—Carissa Petersen, Greenville, SC

This angers me. That is all.
—Mason D Wheeler, Mauldin, SC

Anyone can create a website to get online and connect to people and now ISPs can be the ones to decide if you can connect to anyone you want or not.
—Christiaan Schriemer, ,

Dear Federal Communications Commission: The D.C. Circuit’s decision in the Verizon case dealt a huge blow to the open Internet. Right now there is no one protecting Internet users from ISPs that block or discriminate against websites, applications or services. Companies like Verizon will now be able to block or slow down any website, application or service they like. And they’ll be able to create tiered pricing structures with fast lanes for those who can afford the tolls and slow lanes for everyone else. It’s time for the new FCC leadership to correct the agency’s past mistakes and to reassert the agency’s clear authority over our nation’s communications infrastructure. To preserve the open Internet, the FCC must reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service. Use your authority to establish a solid legal footing for the vital policies and protections this court decision threatens.
—Mgh, Mesa, AZ

Congress has more important things they need to deal with than attempting to break the last working thing on this planet that they haven't already screwed up. Get your damn priorities straight.
—Russell Alterman, Durham, NC

This is a gross affront to my delicate sensibilities, and needs to be rectified immediately. Restore net neutrality. Thank you.
—Eros, Loganville, GA

This is really quite a sick thing, that you folks know precisely how it is going to turn out yet you are passing it. I am sorry but this is a terrible idea.

Net Neutrality is essential and having it taken away is wrong. Bring back a free and open internet.
—Adriana, Sylmar, CA

This is my main political issue. Anybody who votes to protect net neutrality has my vote.
—Tim Woolley, Geneseo, IL

Internet Control is just the first step. It'll start with things like adult content, piracy, illegal software manipulations and they will claim righteousness and behind this mask is greed. If you think it stops with greed then you are a fool. Soon after it will be our information. Governments paying ISP's handouts to control the information we see and the credibility of this information. Mark my words the internet will die from this. New forms of internet crime will emerge as people fight back. Don't do this. FIGHT IT NOW! before the forementioned happens.

For once in your lives, PLEASE serve the public like you're supposed to instead of whoever fills your wallet with unnecessary excess. This has to stop. You're literally draining the life out of the American people with policies like this and filling our lives with hopelessness and despair. PLEASE be decent human beings and make a decision based off of what is good and just instead of what is logical for increased profits. America shouldn't be a business. It's a community.

Removing net neutrality will severely negatively impact my one year old baby business. If I can't easily and conveniently distribute the educational videos that we've spent two years making then we're dead in the water. We don't have the money to buy off Comcast.
—Sydney Rouse, San Antonio, TX

I don’t want it to ever come down to me choosing between groceries or purchasing a new tier package via comcast to be able to access tumblr or youtube (let alone not guaranteeing I’ll even be seen by my customer base since they may not be able to afford to view my website). I do 90% of my business online entirely.
—Audrey Cobb, Rockford, IL

Killing net neutrality is a step in a very, very wrong direction. The restrictions that will arise from this are frightening and will hurt small businesses as well as the freedom of speech and expression, learning, and knowledge sharing experience that the Internet provides. This is a move in favor of monopolistic giants and shows blatant disregard of the opinions of the majority/well-being of the majority. Please preserve the open Internet.

—Katee, Altus, OK

Destroy capitalism
—Ian Suchon, Redmond, WA

As a Malaysian, internet has been the best method of communication here, and if it is decided we are to pay for it, that's basically stripping us from our rights! Not only it is very beneficial in communication, but it also benefits us with a wide-field of information, as the internet is a relatively free-space for everyone to connect and express themselves for free! The economy here is already as tough as it is, as our living cost is increasing, I mean, buying a land here already cost as twice as much! (First I heard they were around a hundred-thousand, but these days, some are literally going up to millions, I'm not kidding) That's not it- the cost to pay to build a house, the maintenance cost, food, insurance, mobility and etc. We are all literally killing our asses here just to secure a nice place to live in, but, the job we have right now, for most of us, doesn't exactly guarantee the cost we need. The internet on the other hand, has helped many, twice as much, as it connects and reaches out the whole world! So, taking our freedom to access away, literally means you are willing to cut all the connections and ties that all of us have made, loose. So please, don't.

—Brendan, Grapevine, TX

Please. That's just unfair.
—Aino Utriainen, ,

The internet is comprised of every person who contributes to the internet. The internets value has been ENTIRELY built through its everyday users. Take away the internet and the internet is NOTHING and NO ONE will use it. It is a telecommunications avenue – it is not a pawn or a reward. Take away the internet and we are splicing countries and people. We are aiming towards PROGRESS not REGRESSION. There is knowledge lost in "fast lanes." There have been missing people found, criminals found, knowledge about safety passed WORLDWIDE, advice given, solutions to simple, daily and complex problems that we all face. Word of mouth is how humans function and the internet is the STRONGEST word of mouth. To take that away is a complete failure of society.
—Rachel Hamburger, Brooklyn, NY

this is an absolute outrage. the internet isn't anything like tv. it should be treated as a common area. where everyone can go and use the resources available for free.
—Jasmine Jette, New York, NY

I really hope you asshats in congress stop trying to take our fucking internet away. I mean seriously what the hell are you gonna do afterwards, drop a nuke on us while we don't have the broadband to check the news for a fucking missile flying over seas? Honestly, you're all just a bunch of dickends for trying to do this AGAIN. WHY? Why the hell do you not want us to be able to socially commune? Are you scared of the people who make up your country? Are you frightened that we'll burn down the White House and reform our own government of non old white assholes? Well you're damn right. And we will be undeterred. So fucking drop it.

—Avery, Crescent City, CA

The internet isn't just some thing you can choose to have. In this day and age, you NEED it for almost everything. Having several super big companies having complete control over what it's subscribers can and cannot go to is against what I believe a free internet should be. You should be able to go to the sites you want to go to and say what you want to say on the internet.

This is not okay.
—Taylor Kveragas, West Grove, PA

Keeping a fast and slow lane is ridiculous and unethical. Think this through and hear us out.
—Megan Connolly, Dedham, MA

the Internet is not a device to be owned and sold, but a source from which knowledge and connection is made and to restrict that with a fee or any sort payment should be seen as an act against the advancement of the human race.
—Casey McCurry, Sutter, CA

Please keep the internet free and classify internet providers as common carriers
—Anastasia Lincoln, Seattle, WA

I don't understand why anyone would think this is acceptable. There are people who NEED the internet to do their jobs and are already barely scraping by as it is. There are school children who need the internet as a resource who already cannot afford it. School and public libraries are barely hanging on with internet prices as they are. This would not only mess with people in their homes, but also make education more difficult and expensive to attain. The poverty rate has risen drastically in the past years and this would not only put more people out of work, it would also create a barrier for our children's futures. 1 in 5 school children live in poverty, do we really want to make that number go up even more?
—Theresa Larrabee, Orange City, IA

This is sickening; only yet another deeply WEIRD and SELFISH and GREEDY act pushed by corporations that DON'T HAVE THE PEOPLE'S INTERESTS AT HEART. This is the act of the rich few. The internet has never been the place for the rich few.
—Saffron Willow, ,

I want internet service providers to deliver all content at the same speed. So called "internet fast lanes" are simply a means to extort more money from content providers and customers.
—Chris Carmac, Asheboro, NC

this is what happens when you let a company monopolize.
—Carson, Plano, TX

wtf
—Adrianna, Ridgewood, NY

To limit access to such a unique and veritable means of education and communication is downright dastardly and unacceptable. The America that we presently endure is nothing of the stories of old, those stories that invigorate passion and pride in the more aged generations. This country is being stripped of its freedoms, and jurst because we boast a wider range of freedoms than some countries, doesn't necessitate an orgy of bald eagles and pbr wherein it's citizens will justifiably defend it with their lives.

Without the internet being affordable how in God's name is a freelancer supposed to bring themselves out of poverty?
—Jessica Jones, Orlando, FL

Personally I am appalled that any company thinks they can restrict the internet by charging extra to access certain websites. The internet is an amazing place that gives opportunities to everyone, be they social, political, business related, etc. restricting the internet to all is pretty much putting the large population that uses it on a crutch. And you can quite me on that.
—Niko Erez, Nokomis, FL

I hope we can come to an agreement that fittingly satisfies the citizens of your country, after all they are the ones who you are working for.
—Isaac Mount, ,

This is a blatant disregard for the wants and needs of the people. Its sad that the masses are unaware that their freedoms are being taken away. Take it from a concerned young individual that net neutrality is of dire importance to the entire world. - Blaze Boyd 16

I'm a student having to pay off debts and my apartment how am I supposed to even do my research papers if the access to Internet is slow a library doesn't contain updated information
—Jerrod Xavier Perales, Bakersfield, CA

This is important for all people, all nations, all ages. There is no greater gift to the electrically-powered world than the internet. You cannot let this tool be squandered and destroyed.
—Jessica Dennis, ,

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed.
—Helen J DeMarsh, Ann Arbor, MI

Please don't take away something that benefits everyone at the end of the day. Net Neutrality is something that is NEEDED and losing it will only create more chaos.
—Jenny Patterson, Redford, MI

This is literally. Capitalist greed at it's worst. This is the older generation restricting the blooming growth that is the social and business interactions growing across the internet. This is a bunch of overgrown children saying everything must be a commodity, that paying to have internet isn't enough, that every voice in this world that only has a keyboard to express must be silenced unless they can pay the fee. —Fariha Hoque, Richardson, TX

The only people that think this is a good idea are either people that can afford to pay such extortionate prices or middle aged white men that invariably have too much money for their own good and invariably want more. The poor won't pay that much for a luxury.
—Louise Wornham, ,

This country is built on the idea of equal opportunity. At every turn, you destroy that. The internet represents a safe place for those of us who are marginalized and ignored by the government. We will stop using the internet altogether if this bull goes through. Think about that. No money then. This isn't paving the way forward. This is censorship, ignorance, North Korea. There are countless organizations (businesses, non-profits, smaller enterprises, etc.) which use and require internet services in order to function. I work for one such group. Having to pay additional fees to internet providers in order to function at an acceptable level would severely hurt us. By denying Net Neutrality, the United States government is hurting businesses-- especially small businesses who may not be able to continue under these circumstances.

net neutrality is IMPORTANT, I mean think about it if companies can supposedly provide us with this "fast lane" why haven't they made all the internet that fast? I'm registering to vote and I will refuse to vote for anyone who ever shows support for killing net neutrality, and there's a lot of people like me. net neutrality is important, killing it will hurt a lot of small businesses. BEING AGAINST NET NEUTRALITY IS BEING AGAINST SMALL BUSINESSES
—Kira Lombardo, Clifton Park, NY

Keep the Internet free and open. It's a major source of economic activity for the United States; by crippling it now, we can only hurt the American economy. Verizon is the only one that stands to gain in this decision, and they stand to gain at the cost of everyone else. Free marketplaces depend on protections from monopolies; when ISPs have monopolies on data traffic, there is nothing keeping that marketplace free.

—Felipe Mellado, ,

This is just a terrible idea in genera. A lot of people will be excessively angry and there have probably already been unnecessary rude comments this will not work how you plan just change it back to how it was before. The internet has become ingrained in today's culture and restricting it like this puts a damper on many peoples including the working mans life and usual productivity
—Jasmine Valdivia, Santa Ana, CA

We shouldn't have to police the internet to turn a profit, we already have to pay for an internet connection if we have to pay for individual websites I think it would be unfair to the masses. The internet has been largely untainted since it has started and I don't think it needs to change anymore. There are already ads on major websites like youtube, facebook, twitter, etc. We don't need to add commercials or add any kind of unneeded jurisdiction. Not to mention the connectivity and security of the websites would be in jeopardy from the changes. A seamless transition doesn't seem possible. Please reconsider and restore net neutrality.
—Francesca Gurciullo, Omaha, NE

How many years do we have to keep protesting this —Justin, ,

Free internet for everyone!!
—Sophie Ingelaere, ,

The mere idea of killing Net Neutrality is hilariously stupid. People already have to pay internet fees, and yet you want to place even higher restrictions on it? Look around you. This country practically runs off of the internet, and not just in the sense that teens spend so much time on it. The number of businesses that would suffer, as well as the number of people whose lives would be made drastically more difficult, would FAR out-way the rich folk who would benefit. The internet is not something you can put a leash on, and I can promise you that the American people are MORE than willing to fight, using any means necessary, to preserve the freedom of the internet.

This is absolutely unacceptable from multiple standpoints. It's immoral, it will turn people away from wanting to buy your services, and it will create even more public distrust and unrest. This is not a good idea, and it won't benefit anyone - including you.
—Arthur Bullock, ,

As a small business owner I rely on people being able to view the products I make on my website, my business is barely bringing in enough right now to keep the website up let alone to pay for any additional fees that may pop up as a result of the loss of net neutrality.I understand that these companies own the infrastructure we rely on, but it is up to the FCC to regulate the way they use this ownership for profit.Step it up, protect the little guy, we are counting on you.
—Derek A Davis, Parker, CO

The Internet is the greatest at of the people of the world, don't let corporate profits ruin the world!
—Hannah Marie Ehrlich, Boulder, CO

This ruling will undoubtedly result in the abuse by companies like Comcast. Money is already strapped as it is in this economy, and many people who do their business online will not want to have to choose between buying groceries and paying more money to have the speed of connection to their sites increased beyond a crawl. This will allow for many anticompetitive business strategies that will hurt the nation's economic development in both the short and long term. Our capitalist system is based on the principles of competition. The invisible hand cannot function without Net Neutrality.

—Alexis Reddington, West Lafayette, IN

This is ridiculous. The FCC's decision affects everyone world wide. How? Websites will drop in viewership due to the US usage and personal financial situation of each US citizen and then those websites lose money. Because they lose money, they cannot run as well, cannot fund content, and may close down altogether. This isn't fair. Someone in England shouldn't lose their favourite website because the media companies in the US are greedy. Screw you guys. Honestly.

—Kathleen Ray, Kingman, AZ

I could write a long essay telling you why Net Neutrality is important but I feel as though I would be shouting into a void. It's essential that we have a sharing platform based on the freedom of expression and the sharing of ideas. The internet has caused so many advances and benefits to our society. It's how students do their homework, it's how people do their jobs, and it's how we stay connected. It is more then a privilege it is a right, and no one should be allowed to decide how that is governed. The internet is a place with no 'ruling' organization, trying to apply an order goes against everything it has evolved to be. Trying to impose Net Neutrality will only case a society more focused on hacking and getting around 'internet laws' then it already is. -Nicola Sibthorpe, 19
—Nicola Sibthorpe, ,

By not giving us back net neutrality, you're taking away this service from everyone that would not be able to afford it, which is the majority of the US. This would only allow wealthy people from accessing the internet.

Internet should always remain neutral and accessible to everyone! Stop trying to remove our freedom as individuals on the web, stop giving in to the ISPs that provide terrible service, and start making the internet open, reliable, and affordable to everyone!
—Alyssa Palumbo, Normal, IL

Yes, we pay for Internet service providers. However, the internet still was available for us all to connect and express ourselves, despite our income level. Access to Internet isn't simply a luxury anymore. It is a necessity and an integral part of our culture. We need it to communicate with our loved ones, to further our education, and to take care of our basic economic needs. Ending net neutrality allows cable providers to discriminate against lower income households and to slow growth of up-and-coming businesses that need that quick access to a culture dominated by the internet. There are nine countries with faster internet speeds than the United States, with reasonable access to fast Internet. If we call ourselves the greatest country in the world, we must represent ourselves as such. This is one such stance we can take.

FOR FUCK SAKES STOP THIS THE INTERNET IS A FREE PLACE
—Kodi James Fratzke, Independence, IA

I do my business of selling art and products primarily online due to illness and disability. Without net neutrality, it will be EXTREMELY hard for me to even get by! I barely have enough money as it is.
—Dexter, Somerset, NJ

Ending net neutrality ends the free flow of knowledge. Don't do it, for everyone's sakes.
—Cat, Fruitland Park, FL

Greedy company Verizon! That's why I left them years ago! I don't like their business model! I know that they are only interested in maximization of profits not fair and reasonable profits!!!
—Dennis Newsome, San Diego, CA

It is absolutely horrifying to know that companies will try to suck more money out of us by taking away the one limitless source of information everyone has access to.
—, Baton Rouge, LA

Why? Why would you try to capitalize on the one thing that enables people to freely be who they are. A tool that brings the entire world together. A place where anyone and everyone has a voice. I wouldn't want to live in a country that would do something like that.
—Jeffery Houghton, East Lansing, MI

Look, I'm a poor college student. Why do you want me not to be able to enjoy myself after 8 hours of school, then work. These companies are not struggling. They don't need the extra money, they have monopolies. I won't be able to afford the up charges, and there are people already worse off than me. Reverse it, please.
—Tracey McIntyre, Cincinnati, OH

Big business is gross and that's exactly what's happening because net neutrality is dead. Stop fooling around with the internet and focus on actual issues!
—Kara Scambia, Hanford, CA

A neutral net is a fair net
—Ahmad, Albuquerque, NM

If you kill Net Neutrality, many artists won't be able to afford to use the sites they need to pay commissions, and will thus be out of jobs. That's just one of the reasons why what you're doing is terrible.
—Aqua Yasuda, ,

The internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. This is freedom of speech too, mind you. Taking this away is classism in the making (prejudice or discrimination based on class, via removing equal opportunity). RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!!!
—Ayanna Harrington, Flagstaff, AZ

It's an insult to consumers that big corporations are even trying to force this. How dare you attempt to limit access to the internet to those who can afford it when a large portion of our society is based so strongly on it. For shame.

By making individuals pay for the internet you are limiting the opportunity for millions. This is classicist bullshit and another way of alienating low income individuals for the opportunity to learn, be entrepreneurs, and connect with love ones. Please keep the internet neutral. I refuse to pay for channels.
—Cynthia J. Zapata, Rosemount, MN

This is not constitutionally fair it will impede freedom of speech at a basic level and put america behind other first world countries in terms of cultural development and our communication infrastructure. The amount of college class work that is done using the internet today is reason enough to restore website freedom, as many places of higher learning would have to detract from their budgets or charge more to students to have these internet speed lanes. I implore you to think of the future and the blow to free speech in America, please don't strike at free speech like this, help keep america the land of the free!!!

Some people can barely afford internet as is, why do we need to take something that really helps some people and was intended to be free away from the American people? What about the people who's business, their only source of income, is online and the people who buy their product or whatever they are doing can't afford to keep going to that website? Is it alright to just let a fellow American's dream fall apart and ruin their livelihood because the providers are trying to be greedy? How is disrupting people's life for someone else's greed good for the better half of our nation? I honestly think that it should be illegal to do this because it is disrupting so many lives. I know that more then half of the stuff i do online would have to stop because my family can barely afford what we have now. FCC would you use your authority to stop this for your people or will you let the greed of the few ruin the many?
—Ashley Money, Arlington, TX

Please, keep the net neutral. It really is an important part of society and forcing it to change (and for the negative) will cause too much upheaval. Not to mention completely obliterate some people's access to what should be a free service.

The United Nations has declared freedom of expression online to be a human right. By striking down net neutrality, the United States government has violated that right by allowing corporations to abuse and exploit customers. This country already lags behind in terms of internet development -- many countries have connection speeds far higher than ours, and this will only worsen the problem. The Internet was an American invention, and this ruling is perverting that ultimate expression of American freedom and American economics. Some would say that this is capitalism, that this IS American economics, but I disagree. Both parties have failed us now. Democrats are not regulating corporations and stopping them from doing these things as they promise, and Republicans will soon see the unregulated, libertarian economics they espouse turned against the people in a gross display of injustice and unethical business practice. I and millions of other citizens of this country beg that whoever reads this -- if anyone at all reads this -- does something; that whoever reads this takes the steps necessary to bring back net neutrality, for the good of free speech, for the good of the free market, for the good of communications and media, for the good of our country, and for the good of the world.
—Nicholas Heard, New Orleans, LA

It's the world wide web not the-pay-to-use-this-part-of-th e-web.
—Laura, ,

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Cesar Ramos, Winston Salem, NC

This is ridiculous. What ever happened to freedom of speech? What happened to us being a free country? We are NEVER truly free!

i can't believe this even happened in the first place, FCC needs to realize that just because they can pay for their internet for the rest of their lives, not everyone else can. this is an outrage and if i could sign this a thousand times i would.
—, Atlanta, GA

The internet is one of the few truly free things out there anymore. Please, don't do this. As if TV isn't ruled by who pays the news networks, controlled by money, don't let the voice of the internet be controlled by who has money. This is only oppressing the little guy even more. As a member of my high school's student-run podcast group, I (along with other members) have been running social media pages to bring more attention to us. We also want to get our website up and running again, but with Net Neutrality gone, it means that this won't happen. We can't afford to pay out of pocket to keep our website up to speed. Restoring Net Neutrality will assure that our group, and many other student-run groups in situations like ours, won't have to worry about this problem again.

I am a poor person and can only afford the Internet as a form of entertainment and education as I can't afford cable at the same time. By getting rid of net neutrality and allowing corporations to set tiered services is only hurting me and people like me.
—Karla Monterusso, Grand Rapids, MI

What this is is a monopoly. It is completely unamerican and I cannot fathom how it has gone on for so long.
—Abigail Fessel, Middletown, NJ

Money is the root of all evil. It is unfathomable to me the depths of greed that must exist in your heart for you to make a decision like this. The only reason to change the way the Internet works is so you can find a way to make more money. When is it enough? When will you be satisfied? Because if you think the American people are stupid enough to believe that this isn't going to affect them, you're greatly underestimating your constituency. I sincerely request that you put yourself in the shoes of the American public and ask yourself if you'd be a fan of this current decision. Please restore Net Neutrality rules. Start treating broadband like a communications service. Greed and stinginess have no place in the functionality of the Internet and the sharing of information. Please recognize that one small group was never meant to own and rule everything, and leave well enough alone. Sincerely, Jennifer Jeffcoat
—Jennifer Jeffcoat, Nashville, TN

I will denounce any policies that allow businesses to benefit from unequal treatment of citizens. Prioritizing websites will further the gap in our society between those who have money and those who do not. The internet has always been a non-hierarchical space and I would like it to remain so. This is symbolic.
—Matt Maruskin, Santa Cruz, CA

Limiting our open resources that WE pay for is pushing a communist-like lifestyle. What's next; TV channels, school courses, grocery choices? From the little freedom we already have, I absolutely demand we keep what we have now & fight for more.
—Viahney Chavez, El Paso, TX

How's is this okay? Internet has since from its creation helped spread information and awareness from something small as a city to a country. All this does is create friction among social-economic groups.This helps to strengthen the amount of ignorance and increases the lack of awareness of things going on in the world. With technology ever improving this act serves to undermine progress. People have the right to be informed without discrimination on economic basis or background.

The internet is a tool used by many to communicate, to do business, to share their thoughts, to have fun and do research. —Maggie Coyle, Cassopolis, MI

This is unacceptable. The internet has always been a basically free place (apart from paying for an internet company and wifi) to access information and share ideas. Whoever is reading this, would YOU be okay with your internet slowing to a crawl just because you were strapped for cash or going through hard times? Not to mention this would be a huge problem for small businesses because they won't have nearly as many funds as large companies. These rising entrepreneurs and dreamers will have no way to pay for the fast speed lanes that the large companies will. This will cause a huge skew of who is represented on the internet. The internet is so widely used today, for researching, communicating, creating, and so much more, that removing net neutrality and making the internet more accessible to some people simply because of the power of their incomes or funds is completely unacceptable. I truly hope that this measure will be cancelled, so that people can go back to using the internet the way they have for years, and the way they always should be able to.
—Sara Lansdell, Fishers, IN

The internet is the only place where people can fully express themselves.
—Abraham Ata, Chelmsford, MA

This is horrible... So many jobs consist of use of the internet. Do you really think they would have enough money for their employees if they had to pay for the internet? If this whole "paying for internet" thing is another scheme to take money from citizens trying to fix the debt the government has thrown on its self, count me out. I already have to pay for the wifi, so if this project goes into action I'll have to pay to use the internet and also to have internet connection? Makes sense right?

you're making people hate their country. you're pushing people over the edge. everywhere in this nation everything is divided by class. if you let this happen, you've crossed the line. you've made it clear you think the upper class is superior. you don't care about lower class children who require the internet for homework. You don't care about the hardworking people who don't have the funds to afford "internet fast lanes". you only care about catering to the petty and self serving needs of people like yourself. you are what's wrong in the world. you are why people hate this country. you are money hungering pieces of shit who never have and never will understand what's it's like to be an average american. "For the people", but really, who are those "people"? you believe you are the only people in this nation. you treat all other like savages. you throw "all men are created equal" on the ground and stomp on it. freedom, the basis on which this nation was founded, is dead. thanks a bunch, shithole.

Please reinstate Net Neutrality.
—Elise Osha, Boone, NC

Use common sense. You're enabling the discrimination of communication and peoples by killing net neutrality, and you're infringing on the rights of people to have an open internet. This is how the world communicates now. The internet is a communication service. Restore Net Neutrality rules.
—Lillian Downing, Concord, NH

Put it back. Give us back our net neutrality.
—Alecia Smith, Maplewood, NJ

Outrageous! Restore net neutrality rules!
—Leslie Bochner, Clatskanie, OR

No.
—Dezirae Fonseca, Okeechobee, FL

The government has no has no business in business. People make a living on the net. We the people build and maintain the servers and signals so we can continue to grow our economy. Stop getting into our business, a governments job is to protect the borders and do the paper work nothing more and they even do that right.
—Ryan Numann, Alvin, TX

If you ruin the internet I will cry.
—Alisha McNett, Federal Way, WA

Fuck no
—Adriana Rodriguez MenA, ,

I already pay an ISP to access the Internet. Now they want me to pay more money to access that same sites I already do. It doesn't matter which ISP I choose as they would all require this same tier planning. I, the consumer, am now stuck in a monopoly. It would be great if, for once, the consumer and general public needs we're placed over the greed of corporate entities.
—Jennifer L Merritt, Racine, WI

OH HELL NO
—Jameelah Clarke, Chester, PA

nope, nope, nope
—, Montpelier, VA

We NEED Net Neutrality now and forever.
—Gerry Nichols, Saint Johns, MI

OH FUCK DIS OKAT WHAT THE HELL IS THIS —Safiyah Clarke, Chester, PA

This is practically like taking away another right. We already have to pay to have internet connection and some people can barely even afford that. Why add on another expense. The internet is used for many important things that putting a price would make it difficult to do. Many people take online based classes, have to do research papers, and job searches, why should anybody have to pay everytime they want to visit a different website? It's just not logical.
—Chloe Carrington Holliday, Charlotte, NC

This is against the entire basis of the Internet. Dont make the mistake of turning it into tv and giving everyone limited access based on how much they can pay. The Internet is for everyone.
—Alexandra Hess, Lebanon, NH

The internet should be free for all!
—Benjamin Larocque, , the fact that were having to tell you this is a bad thing is beyond disgusting

—Casey Blackwell, Warner Robins, GA

This is so important!!!
—Kyra, Harbor Springs, MI

As a college student, I need net neutrality to access countless bits of information on the web. As a US citizen with a tight budget, I deserve reasonably priced access to ALL websites, not just the few who can afford "fast lanes". Please restore net neutrality.
—Joseph Magnuson, Fremont, OH

please don't take away our internet freedom!
—Celeste Kong, Denver, CO

Net neutrality is HUGELY important for creativity at large. PLEASE restore it!
—Janine Garner, Havelock, NC

Restore Net Neutrality
—Sifat Sirajee, Bronx, NY

Paying on top of internet bills to use websites? That. Is. Bullshit!
—Joshua Williams, ,

We NEED net neutrality!
—Hilary-Ann Rogers, Washington, DC

Please don't.
—Kayli Hurst, Belleville, IL

Let us connect to each other in the ways we want, you guys control enough of our lives
—Rachel ware, Ringgold, GA

we have a basic a right to unsensored internet! freedom of soeech and press!
—Allie Wheat, Taylors, SC

Please restore net neutrality! That's the whole point of even having the internet! What good is it if people can't explore it all equally? Think about how many people have their own private businesses, or work for someone on the internet. Even students in middle, high school, and college who study, get homework assignments, and research all over the internet! And that doesn't even cover all the culturally stimulating and artistic endeavors that are put out on the internet on a daily basis. I know a lot of the content on the internet is worthless and stupid, but there is so much that is good and resourceful! Please don't take that away from us! Restore net neutrality!
—Beth Crisler, Bella Vista, AR

What the fuck is wrong with you people?
—Leela Carpenter, The Sea Ranch, CA

Do you want to become North Korea? Because this is how you become North Korea [insert archer meme here]
—Zill Christian, Sayreville, NJ

Please restore net neutrality! People may not be paying attention now, but there will be shell to pay down the road if we lose this!
—Josh Hansen, Kennewick, WA

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY
—Amanda M Woolsey, Damascus, MD

The Internet's always been a free place for people to connect and have fun. RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!
—Irene Yeh, Albertson, NY

Maybe instead of thinking about how we can get money out of our population lets focus on the kids that go hungry, or the people that are dying but can't pay for medical care or even the fact that there is still an issue with race and people that aren't straight.
—Sara Renner, Crete, NE

This impacts every internet user. In the economy here; cash is already strapped as it is. I don’t want it to ever come down to me choosing between groceries or purchasing a new tier package via comcast to be able to access tumblr
—Juliet, Roanoke, VA

Net neutrality affects us all. If the internet ceases to operate as an open forum, the fundamental tenants and original vision for a worldwide communication network will be lost.
—Matthew Sperling, Roxbury Crossing, MA

The internet is a source of information and communication that anyone can have access to. If that open access is taken away, this nation will be as divided as ever.
—Eva Piteo, Shoreham, NY

The internet should be a public utility and my generation will come out and fight for it if you insist on ignoring our warnings.
—Carmen Judy, Reston, VA

This is the United States of America. We pride ourselves on our rights and freedoms. So what makes you think you can do something this disgusting and controlling? Net Neutrality is freedom for the people. I'm so tired of big corporations getting whatever they want because they have the money. Help restore some of my freedom by restoring net neutrality.
—Kayla Gray, Snohomish, WA

Please I urge you, restore Net Neutrality. Many thanks in advance.
—Una Suelene Pontes da Silva, ,

The death of Net Neutrality is the death of free communication.
—Sara Treumann, Minneapolis, MN

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I’d rather not be limited even more by someone else’s greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Rudi Whitmore, Cape Charles, VA

My question with this is: how are less privileged students supposed to do their homework now that schools are all going digital? I'm very disappointed in my government today.
—Lara, Downers Grove, IL

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY PLEASE! It benefits great opportunity for small and big businesses alike in american and, is one of the many keys in growing the american economy and restoring the american dream, so do it for a AMERICA.
—Christian Bacote, Midlothian, VA

Extremely unfair and could lead to a monopoly like business.
—Caleb, Egg Harbor City, NJ

Don't let the Internet become the corporate-controlled equivalent of China. This is a horrendous blow against free speech, equality, and ANYTHING benefited by the unrestricted and open communication permitted by the Internet. For the sake of future generations, to say nothing of the present one, RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY NOW. /Please./
—Victoria Wood, Livermore, CA

The internet is for no one to control. It is a free space for thought, creativity and connection and should be put to no individual's bias.
—Emily Walker, Denton, TX

I'm an artist and rely on free sites to share my work because my family doesn't have a lot of money. I need net neutrality.

Why do I have to do this, why did this pass?
—Wyatt, Kirkland, WA

this is wrong net neutrality must exist, the internet should stay as it is —Luis, Corona, NY

The internet is meant to be equal for everyone
—Jessica burns, Landenberg, PA

I hope the right decision is made, the one to stop this and allow the Internet to be what it is currently. People's livelihoods and passions exist on the Internet and taking advantage of that is disgusting.
—Alyssa, Raleigh, NC

This is bullshit.
—Katie Moyer, Altoona, PA

The internet is made to be free. Keep it that way.
—, Cedar Park, TX

This is the definition of capitalism, and it should be a damn crime. Haven't you taken enough of our money? Couldn't you just let this die the second time you were shot down?!
—seth Townsley, Bernardston, MA

Please don't screw over the internet...
—Angela Reyburn, Mira Loma, CA

I don't understand why people try so desperately to destroy the things I love. All for an extra buck that isn't even going to matter when we're all dead. Why can't we all just enjoy the internets?
—Jody, Tyrone, GA

Is this for the people or for the ISPs?
—keenan Christopher, Washington, DC

While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. —Brittany Branning, Marion, LA

This issue is really important to me seeing as I make my living on the internet. Please keep is an equal space like it has been in the past.
—Lilly, ,

This is complete anarchy. What gives them the right to charge us for something that was supposed to help people connect and learn.
—Kellie, Tifton, GA

the internet has been a leveled playing field of vast information. Now it id controlled by those with monney meaning we can only acces what they want us to see

—Brian Fitzpatrick, Cambridge, MA

What a bunch of asses. Everything's just a business to them.
—Stephen Guerrero, Chicago, IL

The internet should be a common carrier and we all know what monopolies did in the 20's, it was awful and overall bad for the economy. Get the internet out of the hands of politicians, it belongs to everyone. Without Net Neutrality the internet as we know is gone, people will move out of the US for better internet. The internet is a fair playing field for all sorts of media like art, books, ideas, movies, learning and etc..
—Catherine Ramos, Marlboro, NY

Dear Government: I think I see some puppet strings showing. May want to cut those.
—Robin P., Cordova, AK

Please, killing Net Neutrality is the most un-American thing that can be done. All trust in the FCC will be lost. Please do the right thing.
—Cat Leatherwood, Long Beach, MS

Please reclassify the internet as a telecommunications service and implement strong net neutrality rules.
—Bradley Malmquist, Mequon, WI stop pls

—Natalia Valcarcel, Miami, FL

The market is literally the worst system to shape how the internet, the most revolutionary thing that has ever happened to mankind, is used. Restore net neutrality!
—Courtney Gaul, Washington, DC

Bring it back
—ZeroGittingzam, San Diego, TX

How is this even being considered? Does th government actually think about things anymore or what? Sorry for sounding rude but surely even you people can see this is an awful idea.
—Madison, High View, WV

No, no no. Please stop this! It is horrid that this has been pasted. It is just a way for companies to suck more money out of people. Giving more money to big companies is not what this country needs now. Many people use the internet to make a living for themselves. We have come such a far way in the last few years, we are such an intelligence race. We could make the world such a wonderful place for all. But this is not the way. Big companies do not need more money.
—Madison Wyman, Plainfield, IL

The rich already run most of the world. Don't let them take the internet: out last stronghold were we can stay informed and educated.
—Erica Johnson, Salem, NH

YOU CAN'T DO THIS
—Jordan, Lincoln, NE

This creates unequal opportunity as an online college student. I RELY on my internet for my education. This rips away my rights to a better life.
—Lauren Hughes, Duluth, GA

This is HORRENDOUS. The internet is the ONE THING that is equal to everyone in this country. this is UNCONSTITUTIONAL. Freedom of speech and press. start treating broadband like a communications service, and restore its Net Neutrality rules.
—Kelly Clarke, Beverly, MA

Please restore Net Neutrality. It's one of the only equal things left about the world.
—Christy Ann Hollar, Waxhaw, NC for the love of everything holy just stop this —Isabell Moon, Carrollton, TX

We need net neutrality. We need the ability to access information for employment opportunity, to connect to others we may not be able to- distance or economic standing- be able to connect with. Freelance artists and writers like myself rely on net neutrality.

—Ian Ford, Erie, PA

What is disturbing, more than the threat of total control being given to companies who don't think in the interest of people but their money, is that the world is speaking out against this from.taking place and it is as if our concerns mean nothing to them. If there is any humanity left in this world...I hope and pray our pleads are heard. I hope we keep our free speech free. I hope we keep one of the greatest inventions of our time in the power of those who need it. Those who use it. Those who learn from it and run their own businesses through it. Keep it free.
—Rachela Tijerina, Las Vegas, NV

Everything that makes the internet the new frontier for capitalism, small business, and entertainment is predicated on its ability to deliver all content equally. To remove that ability for the gain of some already lucrative businesses will only harm the economy, this country, and the world. It is once again taking from everyone to give more to the already rich.
—Anthony Vick, Gallatin, TN

This is still America, right?

I don't believe that a private company should be able to have the power to affect the internet like the way verizon is —Andrew Morley, Midland, MI

Restore Net Neutrality
—Jason Carter, Mableton, GA

The Internet bills already cost quite a bit as it is, we don't need to have a type of tax on it, having people to buy to get faster internet. This is stupid, and it needs to be changed.
—Lily, Allendale, MI

I want net neutrality. I deserve the right to open information, ungoverned by companies or the government.
—Kayleigh E. Pryzgoda, Chicago, IL

I wouldn't even wish a slow internet connection on my worst enemies. It's too cruel and frustrating. People are so unstable nowadays, giving them slow internet could set them off the edge. Limiting sites until I can pay more is sickening. You're punishing the poor.
—Deanna DeCoursey, Wake Forest, NC

The Internet is a vital role in today's world this is a very important thing not only for people's leisure time but also for their livelihood.
—Ryan Evans, Binghamton, NY

Come on guys, I don't want to have to pay even more to actually use the internet. We don't all have money like you guys up in DC...just sayin.
—Perry Jones Jr, Calhoun City, MS

Why y'all always gotta fuck with the internet and shit? Just leave it alone god damn

—Grace Park, Columbia, MD

Please stop trying to hinder American citizens. The internet is unique in that people of any age, race, gender, or class may access a virtually limitless amount of information. By destroying net neutrality you are just contributing to the process that keeps Americans ignorant. We will not stand for this.
—Rachel Sheets, Middletown, OH

please
—, Bridgewater, MA

Internet is the only free way to access news for students, we need laptops, we can't always afford televisions. By forcing us to pay more for internet then we do in our homes, or at our schools, or force our schools to pay more students will have an ever further burden economically when we attempt to view educational materials as well as when we need much needed mental respite. Please protect the students of the United States, help to protect the progeny of this country that is already overburdened by a poor economy and our dedication to create a better world.
—Dana Obst, Hightstown, NJ

Why? Why do this?
—Erin Horith, Missouri City, TX

This is the kind of thing that makes me, and many others, realize America is not free. We have never been free. It's a business and everyone just wants their money. We built our Country on blood and money, and we've learned nothing from history. Except that a bunch of greedy people wish to control everything. Where is my freedom? Where is YOUR freedom? The idea of tiered internet pricing structures is insanity. I like my freedom, I hate cable TV and how they want me to pay for a subscription to other channels. Will you add another victim to 9/11? Or will you save them by allowing net neutrality?
—Spencer Gray, Brownsville, KY

Please please protect our rights to net neutrality! Paying for something you're already paying to have access to is downright ridiculous!
—Betsy Burnett, Towson, MD

THIS ACT IS THE CLEAREST DESCRIPTION OF LEGALIZED MONOPOLIZATION THAT I HAVE EVER SEEN. PUT AN END TO THIS.
—Brianna, Lehigh Acres, FL

I am very upset with our greedy authority.
—Emily Williams, Frisco, TX

DO not destroy Net Neutrality! Don't destroy the basis of what made the internet the thriving place that it is now! You won't just be destroying a growing foundation but the freedom of a million users worldwide! The internet will become a place of constant disarray if this is goes through. No one will benefit from it.
—Cheryl Y. Esparza, Riverside, CA

The net should be free to all. Everyone is now connected by the internet and if you cut that off we will be isolated once more and not be the thriving country we once were.
—Kaitlynn McNutt, Harrison, OH

FUCK AMERICA AND THEIR CAPITALIST PIG HANDS STOP MAKING EVERYTHING ONLY FOR THE RICH THE POOR ARE LIVING BREATHING PEOPLE TOO. AND FUCK AMERICA WHO THE FUCK GAVE THEM POWER OVER THE INTERNET THE GUN TOTING OBESE RACISTS —Jodie Belsham, ,

Restore net neutrality.
—Cody Eason, Oak Ridge, TN

Not only is the idea of making people pay to access certain sites by giving big companies the complete power to control the internet sickening, it is also a bad idea for the economy. So many small businesses make their money online, which they then give back to the communities around them, thus stimulating local business. If people can't make money through the internet, it's not likely they'll be able to make money elsewhere instead.
—Abigail Wabeke, Ankeny, IA

The Internet is one place we are able to use freely. Taking that away from people is just a great way to pass everyone off.
—Jordan, Minneapolis, MN

Restore Net Neutrality. Please.
—Karen Bourne, New York, NY

we shouldn't have to pay more for what we were originally promised.
—Rachel Miu, Ann Arbor, MI

We already pay enough for the internet as it is-- we shouldn't have to pay more for something we don't even want.
—Casey, Martinsburg, WV

The internet is for everyone. It is a place of gathering and equality.
—carson Watkinson, Phoenix, AZ

I pledge allegiance to the profit of the United Corporations of America, and to the Autocracy for which it stands, under one Corrupt Government, forever profitable, with no liberty or justice except for those who can afford it.
—Kyle Mattingly, Lebanon, NH

Stop being stupid. I do not appreciate it.
—Lauren, Piscataway, NJ

Rethink this decision!
—Cameron, Glendale, AZ

Killing of net neutrality is only enabling big companies to take advantage of the general public. As a student a fast, free internet is VITAL for my education and the education of every single other student across America. My family, as well as other families and schools cannot afford to be taken advantage of by big companies that are clawing for more money than they need.
—Alexis Mincolelli, Whippany, NJ

Don't do this. You're going to make a lot of people mad. It could start a civil war. We NEED the Internet and if you do this, it's going to shut down a lot of businesses and the economy is going to get worse.
—Skylar Tharp, Heath, OH

Please, it is so important to this day and age that net neutrality remains. I can understand it from an economic point of view. However, as a citizen of the United States I find it highly unfair to companies and to the people of the United States that their internet is in danger of being taken over by large corporations. Personally, I don't want my internet to end up like my Television: having to pay for access to a certain speed, quality, and for certain channels/websites. The internet has been the one liberty that many people have enjoyed, and not if feels as if that liberty is being stripped from our hands.
—Jennifer, Wellsburg, WV

The internet is not cable TV. The FCC is always overreacting to everything and now they're making us pay for certain sites to go on? Well that's fantastic for my broke butt. Thanks FCC
—McKenna, Franklin, TN

An internet without net neutrality is not an internet at all.
—Elizabeth Parks, Denham Springs, LA

—Daniela Barrios, ,

Save net neutrality! It helps small businesses survive. If it's taken away and the voices of the public disappear so does democracy.
—Raven DiMichele, Chicago, IL

Sticks and stones may break my bones but limited internet is my death
—Day, Altadena, CA

/PLEASE/ don't let this happen.
—Kiah Kirdahy, Garnerville, NY

This is no way to run the greatest invention of our time. Net neutrality is omni-important to the internet, without it, it is just a gigantic flop of a communication system. Not to mention, ISP's will go out of business if they decide to force people to pay more for sites not in the fastlane.
—Devon Ritter, Waterloo, IA

I don't want to have to pay to go on the internet when doing schoolwork.
—Kirsten Bangs, Frederick, MD

I'm a student. I need the internet for research on my papers. If it gets slowed down, then being a student is going to be a lot harder especially when the internet is also used as a teaching device in schools ALL OVER THE WORLD.
—Sue Heeg, ,

TAKE ACTION.
—Hailey, Litchfield Park, AZ

Do you people have any idea the absolute anarchy you are going to have on your hands if you let these already cash-bloated companies control access to the internet? The internet is a haven for people -all people- in this country, even and especially the ones that are still suffering from the '08 recession, or the ones that can't get jobs because of oversaturation of entry-level workers in the job market. If you take that away by letting companies charge likely outrageous prices for access to "unpopular" websites it is going to backfire terribly. Use your brains, would you like it if someone was constantly standing over your shoulder and charging you for using sites other than Yahoo and Google? You people might all individually have more money in your banks than the common person will ever see in their life but even you should recognize that is a ridiculous prospect.
—Jessica Burke, Enterprise, KS

Net neutrality is extremely important.
—Sebastian Fryer, Branford, CT

Please don't do this to us!!! This isn't to anybody :(
—Jissell Taveras, ,

LEAVE THE INTERNET ALONE
—Celie, Elkhorn, WI

—Katrina Ketel, Morehead City, NC

Restore net neutrality
—Katie Mackey, Turlock, CA

There are already sites that you have to pay fees to watch certain things, etc., there shouldn't be additional costs to what is originally free. The internet is fine as it is right now.
—Keeyah Downton, Sacramento, CA

Net neutrality is the key to innovation in the 21st century it gives too much power to the corporate monopolies that control the internet. I would consider leaving the country if cable companies abuse this power.
—Andrew Webster, Rochester, NY

Fuck you.
—Andrew Berkebile, Rosemount, MN

The internet is a communications service and we really need neutrality. The notion is ridiculous (and by that I mean worthy of ridicule) that my ISP has the right to restrict what I do and don't see on the internet, or charge me extra for certain content. Furthermore, this has been done without a vote by the people which is a very bad course to take.
—Megan Trast, Grandview, MO

The implications to ending net nuetrality are horrifying. Information should be free to anyone.
—Nicolas Burch, Milton, FL

Don't take it dowb
—Tyler, Kellerman, AL

We are a free nation, not North Korean watch dogs limiting the hours of our access to the internet.

The internet needs to be free. I don't have any money to be paying for sites. Y'all play too much.
—Tija Passley, Washington, DC

The internet should be free for all.
—Faye Smith, ,

Don't do this to us. Living in America is difficult enough as it.
—Gerardo colmenares, Los Angeles, CA

Out of all the shit going on in our country, you guys choose to make us pay more than we already do?
—Olivia Hosken, Porter Ranch, CA this is 1 of infinitely many reasons why everyone hates y'all. have fun being the shitty corporation that everyone despises :):):):):):):):)

—Hannah Winslett, Newnan, GA

The internet has been a public source of information that has equal access to all websites on it, no matter how big or small the company (or even the single person behind it) is, since its creation in 1958. Don't introduce the horrible mess the government has made of big and small businesses to the internet in the form of popular, high traffic sites versus not as well known sites. This is ridiculous. We need net neutrality.
—Sarah Jomaa, Northville, MI

Striking down net neutrality is one of the most un-intelligent things that can be down for the future of this county. By taking away the freedom of the internet and handing control over to larger corporations who will dictate what the people can and cannot see, read or experience across the internet means that you are, in essence, taking away freedoms and liberties that we, as the American people, are allowed in this country. To take away the freedoms that net neutrality offers, you are essentially telling corporations, and other entities, that you allow and support the removal of liberties over even larger media access.
—John Tufts, Old Hickory, TN

restore net neutrality please
—Becker, Mission Viejo, CA

The Internet is the future of communication, learning, and free speech. It is what allows people all over the world to address injustice and intolerance, and to network and better understand each other. Taking that away or putting a greater price on that than what we already pay for access is wrong, draconian, and against human rights. It is shutting off the eyes, ears, and mouth of the 21st century and beyond, and that, is a crime.
—Matthew Rau, Long Beach, CA

We NEED net neutrality!
—Siena Falzon, Redwood City, CA

The internet is a useful tool for students. As well as artists and small business owners. Limiting what we have access to would severely impact many people's lives.
—Emme Barrette, ,

This is terrible. Why can't you guys just leave everything how it is. All you guys do is make everyone pay, fuck you
—Sebastian Brennes, Little Neck, NY

Net Neutrality is a terrible terrible idea? Why would I let Comcast suck everyone dry?
—Lily Nordby, Carnation, WA

I don't want my father to pay more for the internet. I don't wanna have to pay to use Facebook, tumblr, YouTube or pay more to use netflix. Stop trying to ruin the internet.
—Sarah St.Clair, Kirkland, WA

Anyone who has played a role in allowing the destruction of net neutrality is either deliberately trying to hurt millions of people or they are too ignorant to understand what they have done. This is disgusting and un-American. There are hordes of people who are not going to let this issue rest.
—Seddon Macholz, Danville, CA

This is ridiculous. Complete internet access should be readily available to EVERYONE.
—Noelle Ballantine, Eden Prairie, MN

Restore Net Neutrality! I already pay enough for overprices services in America. Treat the broadband like a communications service!
—Samara Honore, Lumberton, NC

HELLLL NOOOO
—Karissa, Blythewood, SC

I use the internet for everything, it is integral to my daily life, not something that needs to be changed because a CEO wants a larger bonus for themselves. This is insane. Allowing ISPs to block or slow down websites at their discresion allows them way too much power over something that is a daily part of peoples lives. Please do something!
—John F Thrift, Evart, MI

This will affect Canada as well, and I find it to be a violation of my rights as a Canadian.
—Jeremy Hartwell, ,

Don't tell us how to live our lives. I say this often as a joke, but now, I mean it. It's the internet and the internet is free to anyone who wants to use it. Y'all need to SLOW YOURSELVES DOWN and stay in YOUR OWN LANE.

If broadband isn't a communication service, then what do we do about the millions of lives that would be forever hurt by removing Skype from families who want to speak with their loved ones in other countries, the thousands of live Tweets that keeps us linked to current events in a way that mainstream media can't, or the safety and cultivation of groups that do not fit the majority yet need a place to flourish and help each other understand that it's ok to be the way they are? If broadband isn't a communication service, then we need to reevaluate all of our communications systems.

While I am no legal expert, I am a citizen and I have a voice. I may not know all of the details of this case, but I do understand that it is stripping the public of something they've held dear for a while: instant access to knowledge and communication. Knowledge is a powerful thing that we Americans take for granted. But we are a hungry nation, constantly pushing ourselves not only to be the best, but to innovate the human race. Over the past 30 years, the internet has played a key role in the academic world as it gives access to databases, articles, papers, etc. This access has allowed people to learn things they may not be able to any way else. A single mother may not be able to take night school or go back to college, so she enrolls online. A high school student is studying biology and is learning new information about cells on a virtual library. The professor who needs to recall information needn't turn to his outdated books, he merely searches the web and instantly he's connected to resources. A low-income family's head of house is looking for a new job. He goes to the public library and gets access to jobs opportunities and can apply within minutes. The internet allows knowledge to be given to all. Without decent internet coverage, many will also lose family bonds. With many families spread across the nation and/or the globe, online messaging and video conferences have become an essential for our nation. This brings families together and allows us to experience other cultures without inconvenience. Having instant communication strengthens the bonds between the two places and creates the ability to stay connected virtually anywhere. With the decision of the D.C. Appeals Court on Net Neutrality, these things will become less accessible. While it's a luxury, the internet has become something so many rely on because of it's efficiency, dependability, and low cost (especially because at public libraries, many low income families are able to access it). However with the decision, the prices may skyrocket for coverage and may of us may have to decide if internet is even worth the cost anymore. This can strain family ties and lessen the nation as a whole. Many will decide if internet is an essential. We will not be able to communicate via video conferences with loved ones across the country or across the globe with lessened internet speed. Online courses may not work because videos cannot be loaded or the files won't upload for grading. Databases will not load their articles, which makes them unusable. Having slower and less accessible internet is not a good thing for America or it's people. Without decent coverage, the internet as we know it will cease to exist and what we need as a nation, we will be deprived of. Please restore Net Neutrality.

Destroying net neutrality is not something you can just go ahead and do! The internet is used by everyone not just the U.S.! Let people be free!
—Lorence Olivo, Houston, TX

Net neutrality needs to be restored. What other forum is a better banner for the first amendment than the internet? Freedom of speech; no matter who you are, your age, your social standing, your status. Freedom of religion; where many people come together to discuss religious issues or celebrate religious times. Not every religion as a physical forum after all. Freedom of press; where the press go to make their stories known whether amateur or well known. Where people go to address many forms of grievances with each other whether about the government or a many other things. For just these reasons net neutrality is much a child of the constitution.

—Maren Harshman, Coeur D Alene, ID

Restore Net Neutrality, please. There is literally nothing good about it (unless you are an internet service provider, in which case you get even more money than you already have. By the way, takes more money out of the hands of the many and puts it into the hands of the few. This, for obvious reasons, hurts the economy. Plus, it hurts newer companies and entrepreneurs who might rely on the internet because, suddenly, it takes longer/takes more money for people to reach their site. So please restore it, because taking it away seems, frankly, ridiculous.

Small businesses simply cannot afford the exorbitant prices that could be charged by ISPs, and will kill competition. While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. This will affect literally every single person who has ever needed to use the internet. Without easy access to the web, job hunting will be worse than pulling out teeth, the outrageous prices will make small businesses bankrupt and schools which have become entirely dependent on online resources will be unable to provide students with the proper tools to learn. There are people who struggle to put food on the table and their only saving grace are advertising their wares and making commissions online. Net Neutrality provides services that creates jobs and allows an easy access to education, that is something that can't be allowed to be ripped away from us. Please help to keep the equality.
—Zoe Morrison, ,

Don't do this. The internet needs to be accessible for any and all Americans despite their coverage. If this comes into full effect then the persons, me included, will be robbed by our right to visit selected web sites. This is unconstitutional and should not continue because of greed.

The internet was started over 20 years ago as an open source for the globe to spread information and connect the furthest places of humanity. To capitalize internet speed is to blatantly favor those with money and power to access the world's information first. —Kiana Howe, Darrington, WA

As someone who is chronically ill and often bedbound, the thought of this scares me to death. I have built up very strong friendships with people all over the world who share my disability, and I know that so many other people rely on their online communities too- cancer sufferers, or dialysis patients for example. To imagine that they won't be able to freely access their support networks is absolutely disgusting and verging on inhumane. The free internet is a lifeline for many people who are bedbound or chronically infirm. More often than not, said persons use it as a means of bringing in some income, usually by selling art, crafts or independent literature. For people who are already paying so much for vital medications and procedures, to take away such a privilege and put a price on it is horrendous. Please make the right choice. The wellbeing of thousands of critically ill people is at risk.

—Will, Waynesburg, PA

Please. Don't let this happen to us.
—Josie Kiehl, Anchorage, AK

The open internet is a goldmine. With potential businesses blooming and large businesses rooted this fact is obvious. But more important than this the internet is a library of information. Mankinds greatest asset stored in 1s and 0s. So I'd like to ask you this question, how does a 'for profit' library profit? The answer is that it can't. For centuries people have found other was to exchange information. Libraries have just been a catalyst to widespread knowledge and in turn top notch individuals. Why would you limit the greatest catalyst known to mankind to those at the top, when the majority of individuals who can use it to change the world are at the bottom.
—David Minar, Bend, OR

This isn't the America I was raised to love. I was raised to love a land that called itself the Land of the Free, not a country run by an oligarchy of rich and powerful corporate despots. I don't often interact with the government, but I'm worryingly reminded of the robber barons of the early 20th Century. Please, as an American citizen who is proud of his nation and its history, I am begging you to do something about this before it gets too far to stop. Thank you for your time.

—Gwen, ,

The internet should be as it was created--free to search for and discover information equally no matter your income. From every poor college student in need of the internet for research, for every person trying to educate a mass of people for a cause, for very small business using the internet to get themselves out there, you are making it harder for them to learn and speak. End this. Net neutrality is important.
—Ashley Sarra, Orono, ME

STOP IT.
—Jasmine Pons, Staten Island, NY

There is no world and no situation in which this can be justified as more than a money grabbing circle jerk by the people working for the industry and people at the FCC who will, undoubtedly, eventually work for the industry. This is disgusting in the extreme and the saddest thing about this is that it's not in the least surprising.

The internet is the future of this country's economy and communication methods. It needs to be open and protected from monopolies who charge too much for a poor product and worse customer service.
—Daniel Piechowski, Leesburg, VA

It is SO important to restore net neutrality! We must have equal access to all information on the net. Please take action accordingly and reclassify broadband Internet access as as a telecommunications service!
—Megan Piersel, Norwood Young America, MN

Net inequality rather than opportunity flies in the face of what makes our country great and cheapens the sacrifices made by our sons and daughters who found themselves in harms way overseas.
—Glenn Park, Honolulu, HI

This is not what the internet is supposed to be.
—Helena Keeton, Denton, TX

This is the modern day poll tax. Back then, it prevented people without a large income from their constitutional right to vote. Now, denying Net Neutrality is preventing people with lower income from their right to communicated information and informed decision making. This ruling is unconstitutional. Please. Restore Net Neutrality.
—Jess Valensi, Slingerlands, NY

I think these fucking companies are earning enough fucking billions on TV and should stay on fucking TV, With the Net neutrality gone there will be no actual freedom that we have on the internet, and what makes the internet so amazing, it will be just like TV which we already have. For the love of god, the billions that you BLOOD suckers are making isn't enough? you could be helping the world with the amount of money you have, instead you want more money so you can wipe your asses with it?. We want FREE Internet (not free moneywise but free as it is NOW)

—Emma M, Jasper, AL

I can already hardly afford internet at my apartment. I need the internet for school and to keep in contact with friends that are just too far away. Don't make it so that I have trouble with contacting my friends. Where I have to buy a "See your friends face!" package in order to use Skype or Oovoo effectively. Where I have to buy an extra service from a isp that has been shown to be dishonest and unreliable just so that I don't have to spend extra time waiting a page loading on Ebsco. Where these companies stop trying to provide the best product at the best price.

Please help me understand how this is beneficial to the citizens of the US and not just some way for corporations to make millions of dollars. If you let this pass, you will give yet another reason for distrust of our government and another example of how corporations are considered first and citizens last. If net neutrality dies, then the FCC is will be the disgraceful killer. Nobody wants this except the corporations and there greedy CEOs. Please, for once, listen to the people. WE DO NOT WANT THIS!
—Jeffrey Bender, Metuchen, NJ

Net Neutrality is one of the most important things of our time. No one should have to pay more to access more on the internet. That is not how it was designed. It is supposed to be open and free for everyone. It's frankly disgusting that corporations would be allowed to control what we have access to EVEN MORE than they already do. Net Neutrality needs to exist. Net Neutrality is freedom.
—Michael Gaffney, Rochester, NY

Really?
—Keith Goldstein, Danbury, CT

Please restore net neutrality. In a country founded on the belief that anyone is able to pull themselves up and find the American Dream, this action has actually reduced that possibility. I understand the concept of Capitalism is important but this is actually an anti-Capitalism action. This will lead to a monopolized market rather than the free market we want so badly. You are stifling that which makes us America.

The entire reason why the internet is as wide-reaching and dominant as it is in today's society is BECAUSE it has been treated as a communications service up until now. Take Net Neutrality away and it loses what made it so great in the first place.

Paying for websites is the worst idea, are you kidding? How greedy can you get —Becca Murphy, ,

What about Amazon? Google? Or etsy? Or any online store? No one is willing to pay for a website to buy somthing else. People will loose their only way of income because of this. I really would appreciate recnsiderinng this because this will ruin so many people and impact the ENTIRE american population and then the world. This idea isnt a smart one because people will end up leaving all social media and the internet and all the advances in this worlds will be neglected. If you do this then we will go silent on the media. Please reconsider because if you dont so many people will end up unemployed and poor so you will loose customers. The people who would pay will be angry and refuse. If you wish to still have customers i would reconcider for your companys sake and for the worlds sake. Thank you for listening to my opinion.

This is just dumb leave the internet alone.....ips are just money hungry dogs who don't deserve to take something that isn't there's and make money off of it that would be like say you made a car the most advanced car around and everyone enjoyed it and loved riding in it but Honda or whatever comes around and sees you making money off your car and there jealous so they make every car like your car and all the parts used to make your car go through several checks a day and say your spark plugs are getting checked just because ips doesn't like you making money they don't allow you to send those spark plugs so your car isn't your car it's on hold until someone YOU tell them no more enough is enough LEAVE MY CAR/INTERNET ALONE!

To charge more for what I'm already paying huge amounts of money for is completely immoral and unjust. For an ISP to be able to limit my access to certain sites and require me to have to pay extra for them is wrong. Many small business were created on the internet that eventually became huge successes simply because of it being an open space that puts us all on an equal playing field and allowed the consumer (A.K.A. The PEOPLE) to be able to choose for themselves. This is the way it needs to remain, for it's a step towards true freedom

—Andrew Craft, Westerville, OH

Having no net neutrality is immoral and unjust. Companies already have to pay sky high prices to internet companies in order to get the upload speeds they need for their servers, now this bill would allow internet companies to extort money as they see fit. Internet companies don't need this money, they're not just scraping by, it's no different from mobsters shaking down protection money from buildings, only this time, every gang gets to shake down the same building.
—Stephen Powers, Kennewick, WA

Why would they even consider this!? If this goes through, they LOSE 99% of their 'customers' if you can call internet users that because we won't be able to afford the prices!! BRING BACK NET NEUTRALITY!! LET EVERYONE BE EQUAL, NO DISCRIMINATION TO THE DAMNED RICHER PEOPLE! WE ARE ALL HUMAN AND DESERVE THIS!!!
—Anna, ,

The internet is the last great bastion of free speech and information on the planet. By destroying net neutrality, the FCC has placed the greatest repository of information mankind has ever known firmly in the hands of the rich and powerful, allowing them to dictate practically ever facet of internet activity. Save the internet. Power to the people.
—Raymond Moore, Evansville, IN

Keep Net Neutrality!
—Elvia melendez, Houston, TX

I already pay for internet! There's absolutely no need for people to pay more for certain sites, those companies don't need the money. The internet is one of the spaces that's still free to the public
—Nadia Bokhari, Canton, MI

This decision does not respect the interests of the people.

—Kayla Fontenot, Corpus Christi, TX

It doesn't affect me, but it still pisses me off. This is awful.
—Theo Stevens, ,

Please do not let cable companies control the flow of information. In the past decades, a free Internet has allowed for innovation and culture that would otherwise not be with us today. Don't change the world for the worse. Please don't make a mistake that will affect people worldwide, not just in the United States.
—Kari Wooten, Portland, OR

Stop.
—Odhrán Harkin, ,

This is very unecessary. Some of us need the internet and its already expensive to pay. This is rediculous. Paying for internet and then paying to use whats on the internet. Sure upper class people might not care since they are wealthy but what about the middle class and lower class. Barely able to afford internet yet we pay because for most its vital for our professions and for SCHOOL. Take that for consideration. College, lots of research and then paying for college and then paying for packages on the internet.Rediculous.
—Thamara Gutierrez, Arlington, TX

I already pay enough for my education. My resources shouldn't be limited like this.
—Ellen Hiraoka, Marietta, GA

Don't give the ISPs any more power than they already have —Robert Lucas, Katy, TX

by doing this your stiffing growth and innovation
—Roni Roberson, Niceville, FL

I want internet service providers classified as common carriers.
—Juniper Lunasri, Portland, OR

—James Short, ,

This is monstrous. Nothing but an effort to put more money in the companies pockets. Net neutrality is important! The internet has become an essential part of every day life in our current society. To start changing it and limiting it now would be a massive blow to how our current society functions. Keep the net neutral!
—David R., ,

Chill out, America
—Forrest Mills, New Orleans, LA

Net Neutrality is a necessity, the internet is the largest wealth of information and everyone should have equal access to what they need without having to pay any more.
—Suede Lorenzo, Arcadia, CA

Fuck this shit poopfaces
—Oliver Nørskov, ,

This is absolutely unjust. I cannot believe that people are so worried about profits and taking money from the less fortunate that they're going to do this. One of the most important and unifying components of the Internet is that anyone can use it and it is a neutral ground. It impacts individuals and companies, universities, local libraries, everyone. This needs to stop.
—Kristin Micheal, Broomfield, CO

We NEED Net Neutrality. The sharing of information shouldn't be limited to those who have money.
—David Cuenca, Atwater, CA

Restore net neutrality so j can continue to make a living!!
—Cory Garvin, Casper, WY

Don't. Just don't.
—Alexandra Plachetta, ,

This is a bad decision that affects so many in a negative way. Please protect the internet.
—Beth Bawden, Quakertown, PA

This will only cause more unrest in the citizens of this nation. If you want civil war then the fastest way to get it is to stop net neutrality. If a large portion of people don't have access to the sites they love because of this monopoly then people will become upset and riot. You can't take away people's social media/games/etc. If you want to distract the nation from what's really going on, and I know thats the case, then you need to have net neutrality.
—Summer Foster, Encinitas, CA

The internet's most important quality is that it is a free, unbridled space where literally anybody can access a wealth of information, and communicate from anywhere around the world. Removing the "free access" part would be an active destruction of everything useful about the internet.
—Lauren Moran, Poland, ME

Are you even serious? You want to turn the internet into a mess.
—Shona, ,

The internet as it currently is is one of the best ways to gain new information and stay up to date with current world topics, because everyone has the same access to every part of it. Please, keep it this way. Without Net Neutrality, the internet will become another thing that is divided between the wealthy and the not so fortunate, and so many people will lose access to things that they love.
—Ayo Ajamu, Nashville, TN

Nobody can own, buy or sell the internet because the internet isn't a product or commodity. Internet service "providers" themselves are not as indispensable and invulnerable as they would like to believe. A time will come when the people will take back our internet and companies like Comcast and Verizon will be a laughable part of our history.
—Scott Gribble, Strasburg, PA

What is this?! The government already takes too much money out of my checks! I do not have the money to pay for websites I enjoy.
—Olivia Geiger, Inman, SC

Please do not allow Net Neutrality to die off! Though the public may have tools such as organized unions and boycotts at its disposal, the instantiation of fair business practices here in America will ultimately be dependent on hard, definitive thresholds established through concise law and formal obligations. More than ever, we need to establish a clear, obligation to maintain and protect Net Neutrality in order to buffer America's best interests against the relentless string of inhibitors, as mediated through indirect cases such as the recent dismissal of the Federal Communications Commission’s Open Internet Order as well as recurring proposals such as SOPA and PIPA, which have inadvertently endangered the well being of our social and economic infrastructure. To this end, I would ask any and all members and Authorities of the FCC, as well as anyone else who may read this, to acknowledge the internet as a communications platform and do what they can in order to affirm and reestablish the necessary protection needed to ensure its identity as an outlet for both free speech and fair business.
—Ian Gonzales, Prattville, AL

The internet is where people express themselves, join together to discuss rights, and to spread knowledge. We need net neutrality to keep our freedom.
—Ansley Guillebeau, Birmingham, AL

Net neutrality is important it gives everyone the same platform to raise their voice and be heard. Sites should not be judged by how much money or users thry have but by the quality of the content. And by getting rid of the equal platform you are lessening peoples ability to create content
—Selene Brammah, ,

It's bad enough that the cable and other ISP's charge an arm and a leg to actually get online in some parts of this country because they have no competition, don't take away the sites that small business owners use to try to survive off of, most artists I know use sites that would disappear completely if FCC kept the net neutrality awat. Many of those artists have small children who would starve.
—Nichole A Geist, Reading, PA

This should not even have to be something we are fighting for; Net Neutrality is an essential part of what makes the internet as successful as it has been, and is the very reason why things like Youtube and Facebook took off like they did and became so huge. Had Net Neutrality rules not been in place while these websites had been in their infancy, it is highly doubtful that they would be the big successes that they are now. Not to mention that a lack of Net Neutrality rules will severely damage the many people who conduct their businesses online, and more likely than not, will cause these people to lose their main (and possibly only) source of income. The internet is used for far more than just social media and online shopping, this is not just some frivolous tool that can be segmented off; with "slow lane" traffic on non-commercial websites, what used to be an endless supply of information and research will be lost. The internet is a tool of research, education, and communication. It is used for world wide and local news, it is used for cross-continental communication, it is used as a 24-hour library and is a wealth of information that is invaluable in this world and should not be without Net Neutrality.

The internet will help me get my career. It will show my talents to people as I post them. Take it away, and you're left with no system of money return. The economy here sucks already, why make it worse?
—Abbygayle Bissett, Peoria, AZ

This is ridiculous. The last thing this country needs is more debt and more corruption.
—Samantha Hancock, Ocala, FL

This is just deplorable because not only does it affect the united states, but it also effects other countries. It will effects all businesses both privately-owned and companies, as well as schools who use internet to help with schooling. It effects the home owners who are dependent on the internet, the college student who needs the internet for classwork, the libraries who offer the internet for such services. This doesn't just effect a few people, it effects the entire world. This is greed; greed for money and to make the rich more rich and the poor more so. The literacy rate will drop, the employment level will drop, the mortality rate might even rise. This is supposed to be a neutral thing that people can use, not another way to make money!
—Sarah H., Fredericksburg, VA

Restore net neutrality to ensure STEAM innovation in our nation so that we can compete internationally and succeed domestically. Don't end American innovation in exchange for Comcast's pockets.
—Sienna Cittadino, Pittsburgh, PA

please don't do this, I'm begging you. You don't want to ruin the best thing that's happened in the last 50 years just so corporations will get more money (that they really don't need). Also, if possible, please tighten the monopoly law because what Comcast is doing is basically a violation of that. They monopolize areas and essentially rob people of their money. please, I'm begging you to see sense. Don't do this. Please
—Reine, Pittsburgh, PA

This is a huge mistake that needs to be fixed immediately. Net Neutrality is what we need to keep big businesses from bullying the little guys.
—Tyler Thomas, Zion, IL

This is one of the biggest breaches of privacy ever and how rediculous would it look to outsiders that see how we are treated like kids that need internet time monitored or altered . All the old men behind this decision will be dead or retired soon and don't even use it so that's why everyone who isn't but should be involved needs to know how urgent it is to let the internet be free.
—Dalion, Dayton, OH

No one in the country wants this. Please, open your eyes and do something for the good of the people.
—Andrew Maldonado, Turlock, CA

I don't know a single person that wanted this to happen. Nobody gains from this but the cable companies that are already draining my wallet. Frankly, I don't think I will be renewing any service contracts if this happens stay.

Freedom is free. For an additional fee you can afford freedom of information available on the internet, that we already paid for.
—Breana Yost, North Wales, PA

One of the things that makes the internet such a great resource is it's accessibility. Your SES shouldn't matter when you need to access websites. So much is done online to make life simpler and more streamlined (paying bills, job applications, purchases, etc). Making it more expensive and less accessible only limits it's uses, and when internet becomes that limited everyone loses.
—Alexandria Corkill, Lewisville, TX

Rich people in charge of this decision is the only reason it was even considered in the first place
—Noah Anderson, Duluth, MN

You want to get rid of Net Neutrality during economic hard times? What the hell kind of sense does that make? Who would support ending Net Neutrality??
—Kimberly, Hampstead, NC

In this day and age, it saddens me to see that this crap is still going on. The internet is supposed to be a neutral zone, where only the websites themselves work with US, the users to create a grand digital world that is free from the BS that is the rest of corporations. We already have to deal with ridiculous ads so that these sites can stay alive, but i draw the line at ISPs being able to say where i can and cannot browse. I'm tired of internet retarded people think they know what's best and try to control what we as the users know better. This is our world, and these ISPs should be happy to have our money for what little service they actually do provide. They make us pay insane amounts of money just to get the full speeds that we bloody deserve, while other countries look at this and wonder what's wrong with our country, and why companies treat it's customers so poorly.
—Eric Faries, Newark, DE

Restore net neutrality; the internet as an open, independent community is in every way better than if it were to be controlled by companies.
—, ,

Allowing companies to control the state of the internet in order to gain more money, when none of these companies are even struggling but instead thrive on us already, marks the end of the internet age. The loss of free information, communication, and exchange of culture and ideas would be devastating to a free and thoughtful nation. Freedom of speech means net neutrality must live.
—Scott Castner, Beaverton, OR

Yo, seriously. This nonsense needs to stop. For the love of everything and anything, please do not ruin something as good as the internet.

—Caitlin Stevens, Philadelphia, PA

They cannot do this!
—Annaliese Kambol, Lake Forest, IL

The internet is a common utility. Our society has advanced in communication, exposure and growth thanks to it. To strangle hold and erect a virtual toll road is letting those with the authority to decide how people can connect and change the world. Equality comes with everyone having equal footing. The net is a springboard for everyone to represent, market, reach, inspire, and affect one another. Do not take away the common ground of this century. Do not let money be our downfall.

Getting rid of net neutrality would not only piss off thousands of people, but it would be taking a step back in the view of progress that we as a global community are making. Not being able to have this wonderful tool that allows people to connect and bond from across the world will overthrow all of the progress that has been made in the name of unifying the world as a whole.

Please restore net neutrality rules. There is enough disparity and discrimination (in age, race, gender, and class) in this nation. If I had not had net neutrality while growing up in my lower-middle class family, I would never have been able to learn as much and succeed as much as I have. The internet has many problems but it is a leveling field that finally allows mostly everyone access to the same materials and resources required for success.

NEt Neutrality is vital to our liberty and the way we live our lives today. We do not want to be controlled by companies who decide what we get to see and how fast we get to see it.
—Emma, Greeley, CO

Not only would this be damaging to low income families who use the net for a variety of things (and probably pay for many services that websites provide for paying users) but it would also be damaging to small businesses as well. I'm gonna quote tumblr user drtanner on this because they voice my concerns word for word. "As I understand this ruling, it means that businesses now have to pay extra to ISPs to have access to their websites through that ISP provided at a reasonable speed. If you don’t pay, users’ access to your website will be slowed to a crawl - so independent people and small businesses can forget about getting onto that high speed access tier. This means that the American internet is going to be firmly under the control of those who have the most money. You’ll only get to see the content of those who can pay the ISPs to provide access at a reasonable speed. This means that you can expect to see skewed representation of just about everything, with those bigger businesses who can afford to pay ISPs a premium for access deciding what you can and cannot read, view and consume on the internet." This could cause a lot of online and possibly otherwise businesses to fall as they will lose a lot of customers who cannot afford those higher charges for whatever paid service said businesses would be offering, and would most likely not be able to pay whatever bills they need to, to keep their business up and running.
—Kimberlee Husch, Saint Charles, MO

This is ridiculous. The internet should be free for everyone to use no matter what.

BRING BACK NET NEUTRALITY
—Star, Warrensburg, MO

Dear Federal Communications Commission: The D.C. Circuit’s decision in the Verizon case dealt a huge blow to the open Internet. Right now there is no one protecting Internet users from ISPs that block or discriminate against websites, applications or services. Companies like Verizon will now be able to block or slow down any website, application or service they like. And they’ll be able to create tiered pricing structures with fast lanes for those who can afford the tolls and slow lanes for everyone else. It’s time for the new FCC leadership to correct the agency’s past mistakes and to reassert the agency’s clear authority over our nation’s communications infrastructure. To preserve the open Internet, the FCC must reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service. Use your authority to establish a solid legal footing for the vital policies and protections this court decision threatens.
—Steffani Turner, San Diego, CA

This is so incredibly disgusting. It's so sad to see money take over every last thing left in the world.

Keep the internet free!
—Jarrod Davis, ,

The internet and it's ability to allow for the free exchange of ideas has been a revolutionary technology that has allowed science, businesses, and innovation to happen exponentially faster than it used to. Restricting what sites or businesses have access to this high speed would be very detrimental not just to internet users but to society as a whole because of this. Please help protect us by making sure net neutrality is maintained.
—Mr. Justin Smith, Redwood City, CA

The end of Net Neutrality presents the very real possibility that unpublished and freelance authors and writers will be unable to reach their targeted audience. Personal websites or free galleries like DeviantArt, Tumblr, FanFiction, and others could be relegated to the "slow lanes", and these large online communities of people with shared interests and no money would suddenly be broken. Please restore the internet to the mode of communication that we all know it for and rely on in this modern, interconnected world.
—Ariel Carreon, El Paso, TX

SAVE THE INTERNET, WE CAN'T BE A VICTIM OF MODERN DAY GOVERNMENT DICTATORSHIP
—Winnie, Beverly Hills, CA

A few years ago I was struggling with my sexuality. I was having feelings that scared me and there was no one around me to talk about them to. I was confused. I was fearful. I was alone. Nobody I knew talked about being gay; not my family, not my friends - that is unless they were making a joke of it or saying homophobic comments. I didn't know what to do. So I turned to the internet. I was surprised at how many people went through or were going through the same thing. And I was even more surprised to find well adjusted gay/queer people in the world. I was basically living in darkness and still probably would be if not for the internet. Now I'm more comfortable in my sexuality than ever. Listening to people's stories and finding others to identify with, I was able to become more confident in myself and I finally came out. You see, you can't take the internet from us. There may be some other kid living somewhere who needs the internet with whatever their going through, be it depression, their sexuality, or those embarrassing questions about their body. The internet's for everybody though, that's what makes it so great. Regardless of your age, gender, race, age, or sexuality, there is a place for you on the internet. Well, unless companies make you pay for it. If they do that I will lose my place here because I won't be able to afford it. Don't take it away. I know these already rich people want even more yachts and fancy houses, but come on. Leave us with something.

Internet in Australia, across that big old ocean, is already ridiculously slow. Net neutrality is essential. Since business on the internet is very much reliant on virality and sharability of content, making it even more difficult for non-americans to access content is a big step in the wrong direction for advertisers. Australia is small but many other countries face the same problem....why would you restrict your own market?

—Sam R, Livermore, CA

This is a quote from the CREATOR OF THE WORLD WIDE WEB AGAINST what you are doing here(from wikipedia): Berners-Lee is one of the pioneer voices in favour of Net Neutrality, and has expressed the view that ISPs should supply "connectivity with no strings attached," and should neither control nor monitor customers' browsing activities without their expressed consent. He advocates the idea that net neutrality is a kind of human network right: "Threats to the Internet, such as companies or governments that interfere with or snoop on Internet traffic, compromise basic human network rights." This decision has huge implications for censorship and discrimination against certain parts of the web. I don't want to be one of those people who spout off "you're taking away our right to freedom of speech!" but this is scarily close to the truth. This may also have implications for freedom of information and education. If you restrict access to educational information for those who 'cannot afford the "fast" lanes' because they "cannot afford it" you limit the chances for education of our poor and disadvantaged.
—Damien Anderson, Lebanon, OR

Net Neutrality is essential. I should not be limited to what I can access on the Internet based on how much I pay a company. We already pay for the Internet, but creating "fast" lanes and "slow" lanes is utterly ridiculous.

I feel that it is a bad idea to cut off people's internet usage unless they pay for each site. It ruins connections for those who cannot afford to buy them.
—Bennett Little, Ypsilanti, MI

THIS IS RIDICULOUS
—Olivia, Trinity, NC

I like the internet. Its free. Don't take websites away from me.
—Titus Marshall, Suwanee, GA

Why would you want to limit the incredible thing that is the inter net? It is the basic structure of what makes our culture today. You are taking that away, and, in turn, taking away the incredible things we have made and become.
—Ally McCormick, Tulsa, OK

Think of all the sites people rely on that aren't major corporations. Wikis, specialized news sites, literally millions of small businesses and freelancers whose income depends on their websites. Now imagine simply being able to see those sites at all requires an extra monthly fee no one can afford to pay, or they're all so slow most users give up before getting the information they need. If you don't keep net neutrality, you will bankrupt a massive number of people and businesses. Not to mention America really shouldn't do this to the other 95% of the world, who have no say in our laws but whose internet still mostly lives within our borders.
—Ms. Kai Lange, Spokane, WA

As a young citizen of the USA and a student, I rely on internet from everything. Whether I'm looking for studying tips for homework or new hairstyle tutorials, the internet is something that I use daily. Without net neutrality, companies will fight and pay for the sites that they believe are important and the citizens' voices will be silenced. I want everyone to take a stand against net neutrality so that our freedom on the internet is not compromised.
—Gwen, Merritt Island, FL

As an American citizen, I demand that the neutrality of the Internet be restored. I pay for a certain amount of speed. The Internet is a bundle, and so everything that the Internet has to offer should be provided to me at the speed that I pay for on a month to month basis. Free the Internet of any additional fees and stop trying to monopolize the web.
—Alex, Los Angeles, CA

This is entire idea is not only daft but a example of corporate greed too.

Also shut down the RIAA while you're at it. And tell the NSA to stop their illegal spying. Please and thank you!
—James Mitchell Fields, Glencoe, MO

The law you enacted seems to encourage an oligarchy for the internet. I thought that congress would want economic growth across all sectors, but the loss of net neutrality would seriously hinder the growth and prospering of small businesses. Please reconsider and reinstate net neutrality.
—Elizabeth A Stedham, Sunnyside, WA

Think of underprivileged children. When they are able to access the internet they are able to use it as an education tool. Ending net neutrality ends the usefulness. Would a low income family or school in a low income area have to purchase access to educational websites? Money these people may not have? The internet is a vital education tool that net neutrality protected and made available to low income areas. These people use this to educate themselves and try and escape ther poverty or to get a good education. But the big companies lobbying for the support of the government using money to basically bribe their way into charging more for service is ridiculous. It shows what American politicians are: GREEDY and unconcerned about their constituents.
—Lenny Gingello, Macedon, NY

Please, let's not let one more thing in this country be completely controlled by those who have the most money. We all know what they want, and what we would have to give up. More money. Our money. The internet is an amazing tool - not just for consumerism, but also for education, entertainment - the amount of knowledge that is available to people is fantastic - we have more information and knowledge available to people than ever before. But to pick favorites - and allow access based on who has more money - sounds a lot like elitism and punishment for those that have less. We are all supposed to be equal in this country under the law. Let's not have one more place in which there is another division. Let's actually try to make this a place where we all stand at the same level, and one group doesn't yet again take advantage of another.
—Olivia Carteaux, Greensboro, NC

We Need net neutrality
—Matt, Covina, CA

Please do not do this. You will ruin the internet, a free space of fun and creativity, lowered to a competitive market of blankness. Thanks
—Bennett Joyce, Hartsville, SC

We use the internet for many things. For education for enjoyment. I have really bad anxiety. And the only thing that makes me feel better is the internet. So I and everyone else ask you, please do not take this away from us.
—Shauna Sanders, Phenix City, AL

Killing net neutrality helps nobody. It stifles creative freedom and strips those who do business online of their livelihoods and consumer bases. It stifles the innovation our country needs to stay viable in an ever-changing technological world. Don't let this happen.
—Morgan E. Ashton, Dallas, TX

Stop being greedy and stop trying to control us. This is not the 1900s so stop it, bad!

I am very angry at the dingo you have currently allegedly setting up fair rules for us that feel a lot like I'm getting the shaft.
—Heath Ferris, Endicott, NY

This is a ridiculous decision. Net Neutrality is an important aspect that helps people connect. By limiting it you limit any potential economic and social growth that the internet provides.
—Chelsea Carvour, Hixson, TN

PLEASE NET NEUTRALITY IS A NECESSITY PLEASE DONT TAKE THAT AWAY
—Danae, Temecula, CA

Without net neutrality, we won't be able to use the Internet for school and I will no longer have an outlet where I can get feed back on my poetry. The Internet has helped me to become, instead of suicidal, part of a suicide prevention cause in my community because I was able to get feedback for my writing. The Internet should be a free place for everyone. Please, allow us this freedom.

Break up the ISP monopoly —Jose Omar Vaquera, Riverside, CA

This is the end
—Logan Scott Taillet, Poplar Grove, IL

Without access to the vast open web, the potential useful information is being taken away from the American people thus vailing our ability of free will as humans. This is bordering on a communistic scale. Please return our Internet back to us. For most of us, it's more than just another viral cat video. It's our work, our lives.
—, Dallas, TX

The Internet , unlike most telecommunication systems, was never intended as a form of entertainment, but as a means of exchanging ideas and information. Granted, there are websites that are mainly for entertainment and a person has to pay to access those websites and use their services. The exchange of information and ideas is still the main use of the Internet. A neutral Internet is the true expression of freedom of speech for the people of the world and the best means of spreading democratic ideas throughout the 3rd world. A neutral Internet is one of the free worlds best tools for advancing and educating the worlds underdeveloped peoples. Please, Please, restore the Internet's neutrality.
—David Bridges, Seattle, WA

please stop
—Stephany Marroquin, Reseda, CA

If you do this you'll be ruining the wonderful place that the internet is. Restore Net Neutrality.
—Beth Nelson, Tucson, AZ

This is ridiculous, you do not have the right to be taking away our internet access. The internet is a place where people can live freely, and explore things freely. The internet is something solely created by people and should remain free and reliable. We update it, work on it, create things on it, and it is not the government's job to be taking action in yet another thing that is not of their concern. Please keep to your job of keeping the people happy and safe, and I think one way you are doing this is respectfully ensuring that the Net Neutrality rule will stay in place. Thank you.
—Ally Palombo, Missouri City, TX

As an American citizen and Internet user, I call upon my signature and humanity to restore Net Neutrality on behalf on this petition; I want my voice to be heard, and prove that as Americans we are aware of this cause and act upon it as one nation, indivisible with liberty and justice for all.
—Danielle Louie, Anaheim, CA

I'm sick of rich assholes getting to do whatever they goddamn please. The Internet is for everyone!
—Bunny, Sandia Park, NM

Other than affecting freelance artists and their ability to make a living, this will also have an effect on students, cutting them off from online classes, ebooks, etc. This will severely handicap the future generation and in turn, the future of the country.
—Molly Ortega, Pacifica, CA

Hey no?, this is a bad idea... Can you please not keep this as a thing.... I know I should be mad at you for even letting this happen... The people of the internet are dangerous.... Haven't you ever been on tumblr? It's scary! You want these people in the real world? Actually voicing their opinions? Going threw with their insane ideas! There will be chaos! Baby's on fire! Schools will be sunken! There will be odd graffiti on everything! Non handycaped people leaving there bikes lying in handycaped spaces! Large rodents of unknow origins will plague our city's sewer systems! The supernatural fandom will find sustinace elsewhere! They'll prey in unsuspecting people and draw demon traps in grocery stores! The who fans will run around trying to open things with "sonic screwdrivers!" And I can't even imagine what the Sherlock people will do!?!! You need to stop this!?!! Or everything that follows will be on your hands!
—Kody morello, Pacifica, CA

—John Collier, Birmingham, AL

One step closer to the dystopia everyone laughs about like it could never happen
—Amanda Baldwin, Haddonfield, NJ

Apart from the personal implications that this has for every internet user out there, the end of Net Neutrality will negatively affect small business owners and artisans who sell their products primarily through online services. The end of Net Neutrality will curtail communication, and serves no purpose for anyone other than big business. The primary use of the internet is to connect with others--through social media, through personal relationships with a consumer base (in the case of small businesses and artisans), ect. Treat the internet as such.

Seriously?
—Sara Bjelke, Seattle, WA

The internet has revolutioned life in the past decade. The innovation it brings about continues strongly. Innovation can bring about economic, social and cultural growth. The FCC either needs to protect net neutrality directly or break up telecommunications companies into much small sections so that way free enterprise will actually run its course and let the internet remain neutral.
—Christopher Millward, Poway, CA

This a land where you get the opportunity to prosper, not the opportunity to grab money whenever possible.
—Jonathan Avila, ,

The internet should remain open freely as it is. To have to pay for better access, in a economy and time such as this, is a terrible idea and will probably lead to even more illegal actions taking place on the internet than already happens.
—Trever Green, Eagle Point, OR

You know you fuck up when someone from across the Atlantic is signing a petition against your dumb-ass ruling.
—Euan Wilkinson, ,

Can you please for the love of all humanity, stop making decisions that have the potential to affect the entire damn world? As I understand it, what companies like Verizon want to do is basically charge twice for the one service. In the simplest terms, they want to charge consumers to connect to websites and they want to charge websites to connect to consumers, so basically charging twice for one set of data packets. Clearly that isn't ok, but what's worse is that if this happens in the USA, it happens to everybody in the world, what happens for example when somebody from Australia wants to access an American website? You could say that we would have the same access as before, but much more likely is that the website will be forced to pay to access global networks and because that would again be paying money for something they shouldn't have to pay for, they just won't. Say hello to a world where America and everything it makes and sells is irrelevant because the rest of the world can't get to it. Your economy and relevance to the world is on the line here. Don't make the wrong choice.

Dear Verizon and Comcast and the rest of the greedy American companies, please take your butt out of meddling with internet neutrality. YOU ARE ALREADY TURNING IN A PROFIT, ISN'T THAT ENOUGH ALREADY? YOUR SHITTY SERVICES HAVE ALREADY ECHOED EVEN TO COUNTRIES SUCH AS MINE. PLEASE DON'T BE A DEBBY DOWNER AND TAKE YOUR POOR BUSINESS PLANS ELSEWHERE YOU FAT PIGS IN SUITS.
—Luigi, ,

The majority of internet users are underage people- People who cannot get their own jobs- Most parents, including my own, would not pay extra and would simply cut it off rather than pay more for this, and I quote, "Useless frivalty" please listen to our voices, listen, take an earbud out. And just listen.
—Portia "Bussey" Glossop, ,

Maintaining net neutrality is an INTERNATIONAL BURDEN. You cannot destroy the internet for millions of Americans without destroying a large portion of it for the rest of the world. American literally invented the internet. Don't let that go to waste. Stand up for freedom online.
—Bernard Green, Wellington,

Why are you being silly, America
—Abi, , restraining internet is just another greedy thing to make wealthy people show of more! In the US specificly there should be more focus on social structure to make it more equal between social classes....not to make the wealthy even more priveliged! —Jack Dyke, ,

This is horrible. Internet users should not have to pay extra just to access sites because companies like that are money hungry. Many people make a living out of the internet and this would ruin their businesses. We are struggling with the economy as it is, no one is going to be able to know which sites will be needed in advance. This is taking advantage of citizens throughout the country and nothing is being made to stop them.
—Audra J, Sealy, TX

Please don't do this.
—Zachary Jacobsen, Frederick, MD

Why are you trying to kill net neutrality. This is something that every person should be entitled to. With almost everything being available by Internet, Net Neutrality would place serious restrictions to people's freedoms and access to information. I thought that was what this country was all about.
—, Upper Marlboro, MD

The internet to me represents exploration and learning and artistic creativity and connecting with new people. I am fifteen. Do not take these freedoms away from me and my friends because you want more money. Our money. No. I am an American and I want my freedoms, including Net Neutrality.
—Mariel Wiley, Summerland Key, FL

As American's we are entitled to be able to do what we want as long as it is within the Constitution. So, if you would please just try your hardest and think what the world would be like without internet as we know it. Maybe then you would actually see that you should not do this. I have met many friends through social media, and found out that I am actually a beautiful person. The internet stopped me from thinking I may kill myself, please don't take that away from me.
—Isabel Johnson, Smyrna, GA

Our ability to access the internet should not be determined by how much money we make and if we can afford to have high speeds. A lot of people rely on the internet for their online shops and youtube videos to make money. When you kill net neutrality you kill a fair playing field for all consumers thus creating a biased and class-based market. This is sickening. RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY!

This is only the latest attempt to increase the gap between classes, and it won't work. Whatever is trying to be accomplished with this will not be worth it in the end. Not an ounce of good will come from the destruction of net neutrality. Sometimes I wonder if our government is purposefully angering the people of this country so that no one will have the desire to participate in politics, allowing for the creation of an oligarchy in which the people will have no say. It seems as if nothing has changed since the founding of this country; you wanting to manipulate people you deem inferior, and all. Our country is one of the greatest examples of our failure as a species. I hope you sleep well tonight knowing that you are single-handedly destroying our country as we speak.

Dear Chairman Wheeler: We are writing to urge you to implement strong and unambiguous net neutrality rules that protect the Internet from discrimination and other practices that will impede its ability to serve our democracy, empower consumers, and fuel economic growth. Erecting toll booths or designating fast lanes on the information superhighway would stifle free speech, limit consumer choice, and thwart innovation.
—John Lee, Evansville, IN

It isn't fair to require citizens to pay more for internet sites after they've already paid for the service. Not to mention that this is an outlet for some people and by forcing them to pay for faster access to websites that they use to keep themselves sane can be really hard on them. They would have to choose between using the internet and buying groceries!

It's important to keep the internet an open space for all to access, not just the rich or the people that can afford to pay extra for Youtube or Netflix. We have been receiving these things for free a this time and it is unfair to change this now, especially with the fact that schools and jobs are requiring more and more online connections. If you think letting Net Neutrality die won'the negatively effect you, you're just wrong. Everyone's daily online life will change. Some of your favorite sites might just wither and die because they can'take afford to pay Comcast for site exposure. Hell, a lot of businesses survive on Web traffic. If any major cable company wants, they can virtually kill off any traffic to a potential competitor. This could stifle American business and hurt the economy inot drastic ways. Just stop this. This is one step shy of intellectual monopoly. Cable companies should not have this much sway over digital media's course, and it was the FCC's job to make sure this didn't happen but it seems they've been infiltrated by ulterior motives sadly. This is immoral, regressive, and will ultimately hurt the budding e-commerce scene as it'll be that much harder for grass roots websites and concepts to start up...and gives companies that really don't need the extra power the capability to further influence such things. This isn't "taming the wild west", it's giving certain corporate interests a legal way to control intellectual property and potential and it shouldn't have happened. For shame FCC.

RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY! While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. Why do businessmen feel the need to put a price on living? Everything that anyone wants to do in life is assessed or priced. The Internet is something that we can all share together around the world as equals. But you people are so fixed on filling your wallet that you disregard the importance of net neutrality. How the hell are we meant to restore balance and equality if the only thing in this world that everyone can access as equals is being taken away from them and priced? It seems you want to build a toxic classist system on the Internet and destroy people's freedom. If you dispose of net neutrality then it will just lead to yet another divide between our people to the point that people will be looked down on and laughed at for not being able to pay for a faster Internet and be seen as poor. This is an awful idea in terms of economy too especially in the UK. There are millions of Internet users in the UK however we're currently struggling a recession. Internet is important for education, work, and leisure therefore it will be seen as a necessity. Good for business, right? Wrong. As people will have to pay for faster Internet just to get by in life, they're spending needless amount of money they could be using for buying food, clothes and bills. People would be struggling even more for money in our country. Rather than putting a price on everything and raising fees, lower your costs and let people be able to afford to live. If this method worked in Hong Kong, then it will work here. Net Neutrality restoration is important.

I'm saddened at the fact that greed has brought us to this point. I'm very disappointed that the FCC is taking away our ability to avoid ISPs that slow down certain websites unless they pay more. The web should be treated as a way to communicate freely. Many small businesses and freelance artists rely on the internet for getting their message, name and product out. Slowing down their sites will hurt them immensely in the already crippling economy. We can do better than this. Dear FCC, I have seen a lot, and I mean a lot, of bad decisions made in my few 19 years of life, but this is the worst idea on a long list of devastatingly bad ideas that has passed through your delicate brain-trust. I feel like I'm watching the rise of The Capital, that next you're going to separate us into districts and make us kill ourselves for food. I hate to cheapen my argument by comparing it to a fictional novel/movie franchise but, in a way, it up holds my argument's validity in that it can, in fact, be compared to the FAKE dystopian society in The Hunger Games. People pay for everything now, with money they don't even have. The Internet was the last bastion of freedom. You could do, say, search, listen, etc. to whatever you wanted and it was free, save for the cost of a computer, a modem, a router, and internet service. It spreads knowledge better than most schools in the joke we call an education system and better communication than any other resource. It told the news from a truly non-bias point of view, from all over the world, and allowed people to interact in ways that united them. But you have decided to take that away. All that progress, all that connection, for something as meaningless and petty as money. I know that altruism and the actual lives of actual people are ideas that are completely new to you, but believe it or not there are things more important than money and I believe the free spread of knowledge and communication is one of them. You have other ways to get money, restore the Internet to the way it was meant to be. Free and open to everyone. We won't let you get away with this, so honorably bow out now, because we will never give up and we will never stop fighting for net neutrality. We are not just "Millennials" and we are not just "Generation Z". We are the true D-Generation X. We are the generation of change and unity, the degenerates who hold true to their literary name and will break down the boundaries you set up, and finally serve all as one. The generation born with circuitry in our brains, volts in our blood, and entropy in our DNA and we won't let your ancient, selfish, and greedy ideals prevent our progress. We are the future and since you are clearly not part of it, you had best get out of our way.
—Megan R., Brooklyn, NY

The government needs to keep it's nose out of our business. It has no place in trying to control the internet and the people who use it. What a disgrace. Good job, America. And thus the history books become fiction, and further delude our children to the wonders the large powers be, by constraining and stealing their rights. And the economy lessened and the recession deepened, when the people are unable to let their money flow but are forced to spend it elsewhere. Let it be known that systems that work, and ruined for the sake of greed, and watch the confusion of those when the flow of income shifts elsewhere and not to the pockets of those seeking holes.

—Manuel Lorenzo Mendoza, Bakersfield, CA

Destroying net neutrality destroys smaller and local businesses that rely on open internet services to function. Access to the internet is vital for lower and middle class workers to survive in today's economy; it allows them to go to school when physical classes are too expensive to take, it allows smaller businesses to advertise themselves, it allows students to forge for information. There are hundreds of thousands of people that run small businesses from home, and ending net neutrality and forcing the already struggling workers to pay more for the access that they need would widen the already huge gap between the rich and the poor. The USA already struggles with staggering poverty and homelessness, and the people that are still managing to trudge on would fall short of their needs and join those ranks. My family uses the internet often to communicate with clients and reach out to customers, and at the current time we can barely afford to keep from being evicted from out tiny home. If internet prices go up we're done for.
—Lisa Trang, Northford, CT

The internet is the only free space in most peoples lives left. We must keep it free because others greed and idiocy shouldn't have to affect us and our one way of expressing ourselves freely in this freakin society.
—Riley, ,

Please dont end net neutrality
—Annabelle Webb, Newton, NC

Net Neutrality can not be taken away from us! They want to make the internet like TV. With channels and paying to get to specific websites and things. This impacts every internet user. While we pay for service via ISPs, the internet has been a relatively free space where everyone, no matter their income level, is able to connect, access a wealth of information, and express themselves. The Internet has become a major part of our culture as human beings and the notion that ISPs might be able to limit what sites I can access unless I pay them more is utterly sickening. A lot of us are cash strapped as is, and I'd rather not be limited even more by someone else's greed. Net Neutrality is essential and I hope you guys will understand why it needs to remain.
—Savannah Smith, Deerfield, IL

If they do not restore net neutrality, people aren't going to put up with it and less and less people are going to stop using those companies, then the companies will lose money.
—Madeline Dimbath, Stuart, FL

The internet needs to remain an open forum of knowledge and discussion. It is basically the only source of media not dictated by capitalists. The world wide web is just that. It is a global collection of ideas and dialogue. Don't let US companies control which ideas to coax the public with. We have enough of that with newspapers and TV. It also plays into class issues-- who gets preferential treatment surfing the web? The ones who can pay for it. No, it must be stopped. The government must protect net neutrality.

For the love of all that is holy, can we please keep the internet available for everyone? The internet is a revolutionary thing. It's the fastest way to communicate, it's made business way easier, you can talk to your friend from Slovenia when you live in Pennsylvania. Get over yourselves. Not everyone has money, but everyone has a need for the internet, the link to the modern world.
—Emma Varney, Marysville, OH

This is such a bad idea. Nowadays, schools use the internet and different websites for education, and students can have a whole library of information right in front of them. —Erik Stevenson, Loomis, CA

This restricts so many people. America doesn't own the internet, it's for everyone. That is in fact the thing that was said when the internet was first released "This is for everyone." And that means everyone, not just people who can pay. Some people rely on the internet for their jobs. My mother, for example, sells online training courses and this would make bad business for her. I don't know what you were trying to achieve with this, but you have made so many people angry about this. I am sick and tired of America trying to censor and control the internet.

For the love of free speech please restore Net Neutrality. The internet, though its origins were in data collection, has transformed itself into the most widely used source of information and connectivity in the world. Americans use it every day not only to connect with other users around the world but to perform research, collect data for research, and post artwork and stories online. If we are forced to pay for the use of its services you can be assured that many unknown artists, authors, journalists, and other valuable members of society will never be discovered because they couldn't afford a better internet connection. a decision to end net neutrality will ruin lives all in the name of making more money and that is one of the most disgusting things a government can do to its people. Maybe not the most disgusting, but pretty sleazy if you ask me. Furthermore you would be limiting free speech, because the internet provides an outlet for expression.

This is so sickening! The internet is a FREE based system that allows others to view TV shows/documentaries/social media/news from other counties and for communicating to other people across the globe! For people to now have to pay for not only internet usage, phone bills etc, they now have to pay to view things/make things is just despicable. The only reason they are doing this is because they are money grabbing assholes who are trying to make a quick buck from people who not only may not be able to afford it in this day and age but also people who are already tight on their budget and to have to then pay to use say, Facebook, or Google, or Youtube to talk, chat and share things is ridiculous and stupid. Every attempt to censor, block or seperate the internet into a caste like structure is outright criminal and every support this is a true villain to the free world. Imagine a highway with three lanes where only those how can afford the tax can drive at full speed on the fast lane, imagine further that some exits are blocked because the crime rate is higher than usual in this town. If the USA had learned anything from the past and want to remain the land of the free then Net Neutrality has to be restored!
—Andreas Hoffmann, ,

Please restore
—Jason Cornish, Princess Anne, MD

Please do this for all of the nation. This may not seem critical, but it is. Giving in to big money corporations will forever change the internet, and not for the better. The internet was the one equal playing field we have left, and if we lose that I don't know what will happen. We need to stop the greed of these large companies, and make sure that we keep the internet fair, and neutral.
—Paulena White, Tonawanda, NY

Restore net neutrality. Now.
—Pauline Elizabeth, York, PA

I want internet service providers classified as common carriers.
—Beth, ,

restore the Net Neutrality rules!!!
—Janice Jarrell, Seattle, WA

HOW DARE THEY?!
—Lillian Maxwell, Youngstown, OH

No!!!!
—Natalie Kor, ,

Don't do this to our generation! The internet was our chance to succeed independently; don't take that away.
—Anna Bennett, Tulsa, OK

—Nova, ,

This is the worst possible choice the government could make regarding the internet. DON'T SELL OUT. Stand for something.
—Victoria DeRose, Morristown, IN

Why would you even think that this would be a good idea? The entire point about the internet is that everyone has equal grounds and access to it at all times. It isa meant to be a place of collaboration and fun, not one of throwing people out. I hope that you will get rid of this idiotic act. Thanks, Daniel Doucet
—Daniel Doucet, Little Rock, AR

Please restore Net Neutrality.
—Katie Norman, Baltimore, MD

Wtf??!!?
—Kelsey Dominguez, ,

Please keep our internet a competitive place.
—Eric Sameul Stachowiak, Pittsburgh, PA

Eliminating net neutrality and letting the larger media companies is just as bad as taking the First Amendment off of the Constitution. This is another example of economic exploitation of the America people - squeezing out as much money as you can from people who need fast internet. Less than 1% of the American population controls all the wealth, so in turn, less than 1% of the American people get fast Internet. This is a travesty of justice!
—Eric Graham, Irvine, CA

This is a travesty and clearly the work of a dingo.
—Eric Rudko, Waterford, MI

You people in the government kill the meaning of freedom. Isn't that what this country is all about? Don't go through with this or the ENTIRE United States will rebel. And no one will be able to stop it.
—Alyssa Alexander, Wilmington, DE

SAVE THE INTERNET
—Jaelan Warren, Charleston, WV

This sucks because a lot of take online classes to better ourselves.
—Crystal Janow, Spring City, TN

Net Neutrality is a part of our 1st amendment. Freedom of Speech!
—Greer Balladin, Miami, FL

Please try and remember that everyone uses the internet and most independent businesses need net neutrality to succeed. Please restore net neutrality rules.
—Jada Miller, Fremont, CA

This is an outrage, for if free information flow is inhibited or can be inhibited by a profiting group with power, this is a first step towards full-out censoring and blatant propaganda.

The Internet should be accessible by EVERYONE. Its a human legacy that needs to be preserved, because its a medium for free thought, art, inspiration, and communication.
—Katrina Ilich, Washington, DC

#FightBack
—Kyllan Nazman, Bremerton, WA

This is bullshit. Stop trying to make a shit ton of money off of something this big, or Verizon's going to go belly-up.
—, Scottsdale, AZ

The internet is the only place many people feel safe. The internet is a place where you can connect with people of similar interests. Allowing ISPs to change the speeds of connections to specific websites marginalizes those who are in the minorities; not only that, but we're using websites right now to try and fight that marginalization, websites whose traffic may be controlled by those ISPs. It's the same reason we don't allow retroactive laws: they restrict the voice of those in opposition, fundamentally undermining our democracy.
—Zachary Michael Lamb, Longmont, CO

The internet should be considered a communications service considering our increasing globalization. Communication could be halted as a result of this. The internet shouldn't be monopolized by greedy ISPs who reward the highest bidder.
—, Brooklyn, NY

This issue will affect the future of the internet for years to come. Please be cognizant of the importance of net neutrality- it's not a mere matter of money or power, but a matter of freedoms. Please treat broadband like a communication service, and allow the internet to belong to the people, not communications companies.
—Kyle Turman, Charleston, SC are you fucking kidding me america you do not have to capitalize on EVERYTHING

—Ciara Reed, Goleta, CA

I'm really tired of the U.S. Government ruining life for the rest of us. Well-running Internet service is a RIGHT, but they're about to make it a PRIVILEGE.
—Janelle G., Delaware, OH

Website loading speed makes a big difference in the value and acceptance of that website by both search engines and users. I believe in a free market unless there is a failure of that market to better help the lives of the people it supports. I find it hard to believe that giving ISPs the ability to determine the viability of all services in that market place (one that has not failed to deliver benefits to the world) is beneficial to anybody but a select few. We have one of the greatest nations in regards to technological advancement. Human and monetary resources flow into our nation due to our success. It would be a shame to give control of the success of innovators to a handful of companies. The internet is our world. Please give it back.
—Matthew Vargeson, San Francisco, CA

This is unnecessary and pathetic.
—Hannah, Perry Hall, MD

Treat broadband like a communications service, and restore its Net Neutrality rules. No one wants to pay MORE for internet. Also, you would be killing hundreds of online and freelance stores. RESTORE NET NEUTRALITY.
—Jeetendra Sukhram, Orlando, FL

I strongly encourage the FFC to take action and preserve the open Internet. The FCC must reclassify broadband Internet access as a telecommunications service.

—Grant Rosenbaum, Madison, WI

Return internet neutrality.
—Luke Esquilin, San Francisco, CA

We should be able to choose what websites to watch at the speed we pay for. Please continue your hard work to neutralize the net.
—Barbara Gonzalez, Los Angeles, CA

There are plenty of advantages already existing to those with money in this world, the last thing we need is to allow companies to limit internet access unless you pay and arm and a leg. Science fiction may become reality if we fail to protect net neutrality – "As the Americans learned so painfully in Earth's final century, free flow of information is the only safeguard against tyranny. The once-chained people whose leaders at last lose their grip on information flow will soon burst with freedom and vitality, but the free nation gradually constricting its grip on public discourse has begun its rapid slide into despotism. Beware of he who would deny you access to information, for in his heart he dreams himself your master."
—Jordan Bridgman, Seattle, WA

I dont understand why the Internet requires regulation, its been fine for years and now this decision.
—Douglas Hanks, Eagle Point, OR

This is unfair and you know it.
—Marissa C. Hernandez, Vancouver, WA

The internet was one of the only arenas left in which those not born to privilege could stand on equal grounds with anyone else and be judged based solely on their own merit. Isn't that the heart of the American Dream. Please restore net neutrality.
—Zachary William Scantland Theis, Cohoes, NY

net neutrality is so important since it just got repealed, cable companies now can charge extra for speed for site hosts, which means sites like netflix, youtube or really any site in the world have to pay extra in order to have the maximum speeds for customers which means: small companies that might be doing rly great shit won’t be able to handle a lot of customers bc it might be too expensive to pay for higher speeds big sites like tumblr/twitter/facebook are going to have to pay extra money so you can get your content as fast as possible, and guess who’s going to have to bear that extra cost (hint: us) cable companies already have a monopoly over cable/telephone networks (there’s only like 3 major ones and comcast makes up for more than 50% of america’s cable rn, not good) but now they’re going to control internet speeds too, which means they can do whatever they want to the speeds of your favorite sites and you can’t even switch out since they have no competition if they don’t like the site for a political reason, they can increase prices to however high they want, therefore slowing the site down by so much that they can’t function anymore they say they’re making an “internet fast lane” but really what it means is that most sites (unless they got the $$$) are going to be on the slow lane by default
—Molly Moore, Columbus, OH

Fight the power
—Xavier galvez, San Jose, CA

Net Neutrality is essential to our future.
—William Petit, Akron, OH

The internet should be an open access of information and communication among the people of the world. I'd prefer not to have businesses try and drag that down.
—Dakotah Atkinson, Chesapeake, VA

Fuck that!
—Laurence, ,

This is so freaking ridiclous, I would rather die then this happen.
—Anna, Charleston, WV

—Dalia Josephs, Hamden, CT

Do these people even know what the internet is like or do they just think they're entitled to put an even greater distance between social groups?
—Gaby Granata, Eatontown, NJ

The internet is an invention for the world to use and should be kept as a free domain for everyone.
—Carole King, ,

I believe that corporations will not heed the rights of the individual and will stifle the opening for economic and social growth that is the internet.
—Ben Jensen, Tucson, AZ

This isn't going to help the economy nor create jobs or support new businesses. Please restore an open internet to better help our nation compete globally.
—Daniel Eagal, Buffalo, NY

The internet should be a free zone for all people. It should be a level playing field and no one should have the right to take that away or unfairly dole out better and worse pieces of it by their personal opinion.
—Alexa Harzan, Newport Beach, CA

Please no. Just keep it free.
—Abbey, Plantersville, TX

If this happens then the internet will be dead, everything that makes it so awesome will cease to exist, and on top of that it will absolutely ruin small buisnesses that rely on the internet to be successful
—Samuel Wright, ,

Restore Net Neutrality
—Cat, Shelby, NC

—Lindsay Lamy, Montgomery Village, MD

—Miriam Perez, Harlingen, TX

Capitalism doing what capitalism does best - privilege the already privileged and punish the poor. Absolutely disgusting.
—Amy Martin, ,

It's not fair to have to pay to use sites. This should be free to all people, not just to those who can afford it. So many people can't afford to pay any extra to use the internet.
