Dear FCC,

My name is Ken Bixler and I live in Newark, OH.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as a world citizen, I need to know that there will not be barriers to entry for the new ideas and services that broaden human knowledge. If ISP subscribers have an easier time loading websites of large for profit corporations, then other sources of knowledge like National Public Radio (NPR) will be unable or less able to provide other views of the world. I don't want the future of the world driven by profit.

Sincerely,

Ken Bixler
