Dear FCC,

My name is Alana May Barbour and I live in sacramento, CA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it users may have fewer options and a less diverse Internet.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

As a college student who is studying for programming and being a network admin, getting rid of net neutrality poses a great threat to my job market. Less people will want to use the internet if there having to pay for each site they want to visit, leading to many small companies closing down because they can't afford to be visible enough to make the money they need. This will also stop new online company's from starting. The reason t.v. is becoming obsolete is because of the internet and how its way cheaper and easier to use. If you mess up both of them people are going go back to reading books and playing outside and you cant really make nearly as much money off of that. The world is better for everyone being free.

Sincerely,

Alana May Barbour
