Dear FCC,

My name is Jaymes Thompson and I live in Nashua, NH.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as a freelance illustrator, I need to know that there will not be barriers to entry for the new work that I display or my ability to reach out to publishers. If ISP subscribers have an easier time loading websites of existing companies than the artwork or messages the common man would like to share, there's no way that we will be able to compete or succeed.

Sincerely,

Jaymes Thompson
