Dear FCC,

My name is Robert P. Rehner and I live in Novi, MI.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

As a person who considers themselves a life long student, I rely on the internet to learn about new and exciting concepts. These ideas could then be inspirational for any number of things both professional and personal; options that allow for more growth in the economy. I personally find that having easy access to a wide range of materials has honestly enriched my life. Being able to talk to family for free on Skype when teaching half way around the world made me feel more connected with my loved ones, and even helped maintain my relationship with my fiancée.

Please stand up for net neutrality and make sure that all people have the opportunity to better themselves and to better the world.

Sincerely,

Robert P. Rehner
