Dear FCC,

My name is Andrew Suchan and I live in Peninsula, OH.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it users may have fewer options and a less diverse Internet.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

The Internet is important to me because I'm a high school student with a current huge treasure trove of information and new ideas and knowledge available to me in ways that educators couldn't provide before. I've also connected with more people and stayed connected with more than ever before. With the pay to play system the economically disadvantaged will be at larger disadvantage due to lack of money to afford better access information kept away from ISPs and education would become more of a matter of how much money your parents decided to pay for internet, not skill, motivation, and persistency.

Sincerely,

Andrew Suchan
