Dear FCC,

My name is Alexandra Maldonado and I live in San Elizario, TX.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it I wouldn't be able to keep in contact with my friend who now lives miles away

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because You are literally going to backhand our progress in communication and learning experiences.

I understand you must be up to your eyeballs in cold hard cash but really? You're trying to harness a concept that allows millions of people to communicate freely and interact and you're trying to make even more money out of it? What is wrong with you? Have you forgotten some colleges offer online courses, teachers use online resources that students must reach, ONLINE. What about the companies and businesses that use their internet frequently for business transactions? How about ordering things online? Keeping in touch with friends and family who live far away? You disgust me, really you do. Don't do this, if you have even a tiny scrap of dignity in your corrupted little brain you'd realize you're making the biggest mistake of your life that you will ever hope to comprehend.

Sincerely,

Alexandra Maldonado
