Dear FCC,

My name is Anonymous and I live in Long beach, CA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as a highschool student, I have to write a junior thesis. I need the Internet for resources. The library is great but what if the books I need aren't there? Also libraries use the Internet to keep track of the books checked out. They can't afford to pay for the Internet and neither can I. I also use the Internet to check my school grades. By making me pay, you're making me pay to make sure my grades (and by extension my future) are sound.

Sincerely,

Anonymous
