Dear FCC,

My name is Sarah and I live in Walton, KY.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because ISPs could act as the gatekeepers to their subscribers.

The internet should be a place for people to form new ideas and express themselves; whether it be for the next big social media sight or a blog, there should be equal access for everyone. Especially for some people, like myself, who can not get cable internet service provided because of our location. We rely on satellite GB downloads, which are already slow. EVEN VERIZON. To slow down servers even more will make getting work done even harder. I am a full-time college student who also works a part-time job. I don't have the spare time for big and greedy companies to slow down my internet because they want more money. It is immoral, unfair, and quite frankly I believe unconstitutional.

Sincerely,

Sarah
