Dear FCC,

My name is Samuel Rees and I live in Vienna , VA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

Competition makes for good products and services. A pay to play system will dramatically increase the barrier to entry into the internet products and services marketplace - and consumers will be the losers. National cable companies are already the best example of the terrible effects of a marketplace with reduced competition, don't make the internet as bad as cable. Next thing we know Netflix will be out of business and I'll be paying $5 for YouTube. This is what the FCC is for - to organize and regulate these data technologies for the benefit of the public good. Only an insane or corrupt man would say the loss of net neutrality would benefit consumers.

Sincerely,

Samuel Rees
