

Dear FCC,

My name is Monica Yesenia Castro and I live in San Francisco, CA.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it users may have fewer options and a less diverse Internet.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is important to me because, as a college business student, I need to know that there will not be barriers to entry for the new ideas and services that I hope to bring to the marketplace. If ISP subscribers have an easier time loading websites of existing companies than my new innovative product, there's no way that I will be able to compete or succeed.

You guys wouldn't be able to fire and lay off those 10000 middle management pencil pushers and replace them with 10000 middle management keyboard pushers. Oh, and if this internet crap really hit off (HA!), guess what? You guys won't be able to have an easier time to hide every shit you've got. Blackmail, porno, bribery and animu. You know why? Cause there's this thing called a "credit" currency. It ain't like paper trail, where the number is, what, 1 to 999999999. It's a lot lower than that. There's no use hiding it either, because everyone will come after your ass for revenge. They want you to suffer for ruining our fanfiction and fanart just cause you slowass can't get with the program.

The pay for play plan WILL suck like cable TV. It'll be the same reason people either switch to Dish or go back reading a fucking newspaper: We're poor. P-0-0-R. The majority are living with their family, and extended family, because y'all think $7.25 an hour will sustain ourselves like the goddamn 1950s and 1990s. News flash, it doesn't. Fuck, we're lucky if we even get the minimum part time hours. Usually to keep us alive, plot twist: we have a life, and/or we got out of college to pay for a shitty student debt that suppose to make our lives better, not plot twist: it didn't, assholes.

So yeah, cable TV may take a while to change their already overpriced accommodations (Fox Channel...//yay//..), but you don't want to fuck with the internet. The only reason you guys are so good with TV, but suck at the internet is because you NEVER grew up with it. Those that do did it as pretty young age: from secret grunge fans trying to finish grad school to fucking two-year-old trying to play on their Reader Rabbit CD-ROM. For the first time in your life, you felt obsolete. While TV did gave you things to open your mind and see the world, a computer actually let's us TALK to the world. We are communicating so much to the point we can provide the answers to handling our lives. Maybe not the right one, but it's better than getting one advice from a rerun of Law and Order on a box.

So please, drop this last minute bullshit you call of an idea. You're making yourself look more obsolete than what we need to see. Also, Fired Michael Powell, Tom Wheeler, and their clique club out of high pay jobs. They're not young adult who just wants to draw two gay transformers robots kissing each other, raising kids, while I got to juggle my shit called "life".

P. S.

You white hetero-cis old guys are becoming more predictable than the same lobbyist for cigarettes. Seriously, can't you be original and not stupid with your get rich n' richer quick scheme? Ugh, no wonder tumblr hates you.

P. S. S

Yes, haha, you found my penname at Google. Who hasn't?
