

Dear FCC,

My name is Anastasija Pejkovska and I live in Bremen, CT.

Net neutrality, the principle that Internet service providers (ISPs) treat all data that travels over their networks equally, is important to me because without it ISPs could have too much power to determine my Internet experience by providing better access to some services but not others.

A pay-to-play Internet worries me because new, innovative services that can't afford expensive fees for better service will be less likely to succeed.

The Internet is a wonderful place where everyone gets to express him/herself in whichever way he/she wants. It allows us to get whatever we want, whenever we want, with no restrictions as to what kind of information is allowed on it, or what kind of information we can get. This should stay for the future.

As a biochemistry student who is just entering the exciting world of science, I am highly grateful for all the resources that I can currently access online for no extra payment at all. It is a great way to enhance my knowledge and further the boundaries of my scientific and innovative mind. Moreover, it is a great relief and a channel of stress and boredom relief in the times when such outlets are needed. I would like to continue being able to use the Internet however I want in the future, without being brainwashed into something I don't like by someone over whom I have no influence. Let's be honest- television is a medium in which this is sufficiently done. There is no need for any additional attempt to influence the society and all of its collective thoughts and actions.

Sincerely,

Anastasija Pejkovska
