

7522887802.txt

Dear fellow compatriots of the year 2014,

In this day and age when the human spirit is hell bent on advancing at an unprecedented speed; it seems, to put it bluntly, stupid, to propose anything that would slow down the primary form of communication today. That being said, I understand the fiscal reasons you may have behind your decisions but consider this: If net neutrality does die you have no idea what kind of effect it will have on the desire to use the internet. The internet is so popular because it is the crystalized exemplification of the ideology of the future. Anyone can share anything (well almost), and they can do it for free, anywhere in the world. The internet is the infancy of a global democracy and to change the philosophy behind it could have vast and unpredictable implications.

Thank you for your consideration,

The Ambassador