The neutrality of the Internet as it is today is fine. If you allow providers to create fast lanes and slow lanes all you are really creating are slow lanes. Unless you pay a premium you'll be in the slow lane. This would skyrocket the costs to use the Internet and it is the providers that will walk away with all the money. All they will do is slow everyone down unless you pay the ransom. This is government at its worst: pushing forward an idea promoted by the Internet Providers to allow them to make more money. It is not the government for the people but the government where politicians load their pockets by passing a bill in favor of the big corporations and AGAINST all American People. We the People say "NO".
